How Bertie Managed His Own Romance

A Novel in a Nutshell—By John Worne.

"He came back and took up the ring. He looked at her pathetically but she had seated herself and taken up a novel."

"This is too much!" said Eva, with flashing eyes. "I have endured a good deal from you, Mr. Pihlinghame, since we became engaged, but you have gone too far!"

Bertie was overcome with humility and repentance. "If you will tell me what I have done wrong," he said, "I will do anything"—

"You can do nothing but leave me at once."

"Eva," he pleaded, "have you thought what that would mean? What have I done to deserve it?"

"Can you deny," she said, turning upon him fiercely, "that you proposed to Enid Stafford last night?"

"I did not," he said, firmly. "She proposed to me—practically."

"Oh!" she replied, in exasperation. "Well, you accepted her, then, if you like to put it in that way."

He protested meekly. "I said I'd be delighted to accept her, provided she could arrange the matter with you. You leave out the most important part."

"And—and you think that—you think that is nothing! You imagine I am going to stand"—

"What was a fellow to do?" he asked, raising his shoulders. "It was the first offer I had had—I was naturally a little nervous—I didn't like to be rude to a lady."

She uttered an exclamation of impatience.

"I don't think I had encouraged her attentions," he said; "that wouldn't be right, would it? No, I assure you, I thought it so sudden—so unexpected. I told her so. So we agreed that it wouldn't be right to do anything without consulting you."

"Well, I give you my full permission to marry her."

"I am sorry," he replied. "I was hoping you would put difficulties in the way, tell us to wait a year or—or out us off, or something of that kind. I trusted to you to put an end to this foolish entanglement." She said nothing. "Well," he went on, "if you really mean it, I suppose it can't be helped. I will go. Eva, Eva, have you considered what misery this means to us both?"

"Thank you," she said, frigidly. "I have no doubt that I can console myself; I will accept the first proposal that comes."

"You mean that?"

"Certainly. Do you think you are the only one free to do as you like?"

"You are very hard upon me. However, good-by."

"Good-by," she said. He had reached the door. "I think you have forgotten the ring," she said, laying it on the table.

He came back and took it up. He looked at her pathetically, but she had seated herself and taken up a novel. He went out, closed the door, and was gone. Standing in the street, he reflected a moment, wondering what to do to fill up the time before lunch. He finally hailed a hansom and drove to one of his seventeen clubs. In the smoke-room he found the Colonel writing a letter to the Times. The Colonel was the most shocking bore ever known. He had proposed to Eva before her engagement to Bertie, and even that he had done in an insufferably dull way. His favorite occupation was hearing early exclusive, and he knew all the arguments against Free Trade. He had a good heart and meant well.

"I congratulate you, sir."

Bertie went up to him, and said, in a husky voice, "I congratulate you, sir."

The Colonel looked up. "Ah, good morning!"

Bertie took his hand and shook it solemnly. "I congratulate you, sir," he repeated.

"Eh?" said Sir Colonel. "Oh, ah, yes!—that article on 'Gladstonian Fallacies.' Yes, I flatter myself that it has its merits, eh? Now, would you believe it"—he pressed a forefinger between Bertie's ribs—"they weren't going to put it in; fact is, I had quite a difficulty"——

"I didn't mean that, though I entirely agree with what the article said—every word of it," he added, firmly, for the Colonel seemed about to speak. "What I meant was—ah, but you must know!"

The Colonel shook his head. Bertie looked round, saw that nobody was within hearing, and lowered his voice. "I have just seen Miss Rowen." He stopped. The Colonel was still puzzled. "From what I gathered, she had been reading that article—over your signature."

"I didn't sign it."

"I mean, she had recognized the style at once; one can't help doing that." The Colonel nodded and beamed. "I found her cold toward me; I tried to get an explanation; I soon found that I was in a false position."

"Bless my soul!" said the Colonel, becoming very red in the face.

Bertie's voice broke. "I felt bound to release her from her engagement," he said. "I—I congratulate you, sir."

"I'm—I'm very sorry for you," gasped the Colonel, decently concealing his blissful rapture, "I—er—I assure you—bless my soul—dear, dear—this is most remarkable!"

"No," said Bertie; "never mind me. I ought to have known from the first that my case was hopeless against a man who could write like that upon—upon—er—the subject of that article."

"Bless my soul!" repeated the Colonel, dazed; "I must—I must go home and consider this; this is most important." He tore up the letter he had been writing. "I am much obliged to you—indeed I am! I—er—can't say how sorry I feel for you. I—er"——

"Four o'clock was the time she said she would be at home."

"You may say we are at home; and go and ask Mrs. Rowen to come quick."

"Bless my soul! Four this afternoon! Dear, dear! Good morning!"

He hurried out with a light step, muttering to himself. Bertie settled down for a few minutes with a paper. It was not long before Lord Bobby Dalmainham strolled in for his customary after-breakfast light reading. He greeted Bertie cheerily. Bertie looked at him with a cold stare, rose, and walked toward the door.

"Hullo!" said Lord Bobby, with a blank face. "What's happened now? What have I been doing this time?" They were alone in the room. Bertie turned and faced him.

"Is that all that question of me?" he said, indignantly. "And you are the man I used to think of as a friend I could trust!"

Lord Bobby whistled low.

"You'll understand," said Bertie, "that it is quite impossible for our acquaintance to continue."

"What on earth?"—— asked Lord Bobby.

"I leave that to your own conscience."

"But I assure you, on my honor, my dear fellow, I haven't the ghost of a notion what the deuce we're talking about."

"What's the good of pretending like this?" said Bertie.

"If you'd give me a hint," said Lord Bobby; "anything to help me out. I never was clever."

"Well," said Bertie, bitterly, "you'll be glad to hear that I'm no longer engaged to Miss Rowen."

"I'm most awfully sorry, old man; but what?"——

"None of your crocodile's tears, please. It was only with the greatest difficulty that I extracted from her the fact that this is just what you and she have been longing for for months past."

"By Jove!" said Lord Bobby, his face lighting up. "She said she had been longing"——

"She owed me some explanation for the change in her feelings toward me, I soon found that a visit from somebody was hoped for at four this afternoon, and it didn't take long to find out who that somebody was. And this is your gratitude to the man who saved your life!"

"My dear fellow, I—I can't say how sorry I am for you; but it's the fortune of war, you know. Four o'clock, did you say? Here's a man for himself, you know, and somebody does the rest." Lord Bobby did not say this exultantly, but in a gentle tone, by way of consolation.

"You may be right," said Bertie, sadly, "and I dare say it isn't your fault. Who would have expected her to fall in love with you?"

"It certainly is bad luck, old man," said Lord Bobby, "I shouldn't like it if I were you. Well, I'm off—thanks for telling me!"

"Be punctual!" Bertie called out, as he left the room. He then wandered round looking for men who were acquainted with Eva. He found no more, so he drove off to another club, and there, also, was the cause of much happiness in three bosoms. The Hon. Percy Fitzpearce was, at first, considerably astonished, but, on reflection (looking glass reflection), he quite understood how it came about. Archie Pawling, though he had not, as a matter of fact, contemplated matrimony for some time yet, saw a thing before him an opportunity of getting rid of his creditors which was not likely to occur again; while Phil Bartram had suspected something of the kind long ago. They were all sympathetic and they all determined to be punctual.

Bertie then lunched and debated with himself the advisability of leaving town for a few days.

At half-past three it was raining, and Eva decided to stay at home. She was feeling dull, and had been half-inclined to find out from Enid Stafford what had really happened in the matter of that proposal of marriage. Perhaps, after all, they didn't mean it seriously. Somehow, it seemed rather a small thing to be the cause of a separation forever. She was dreaming half-regretfully of the happy past, when, at five minutes to four, John looked in.

"Colonel Cush is at the door, Miss. Shall I say 'Not at home'?"

"Oh, bother! Yes. No; wait a minute. You haven't opened the door yet?"

"No, Miss."

She thought it well to be polite to the Colonel; he was an old friend of Mr. Rowen.

"You may say we're at home; and go and ask Mrs. Rowen to come quick. And if anybody else does come—I don't suppose anybody will—you can let them in at once."

It was always well to be fortified by numbers against the Colonel. He entered, radiant, but uncertain as to the exact thing to be done. However, a little earnest pressure of the hand was enough to begin with. She didn't return it. But how could she till after he had declared himself? He began on the subject which formed the golden link between them.

"So you admire 'Gladstonian Fallacies?'" he asked, modestly.

"Awfully," she murmured; "don't you?"

She resigned herself to fate, and wondered how soon help would arrive. It came sooner than she expected.

John opened the door, and Lord Bobby entered with a rush and a happy smile. But the rush was checked and the smile froze. He shook hands with Eva with a look full of meaning and sympathy, and nodded stiffly to the Colonel. The Colonel glared at him, and gave Eva a glance which was to make her understand that he felt the indignities as much as she did. Lord Bobby sat down, and, having come prepared with only one subject of conversation, said nothing for some time. The Colonel proceeded to explain one or two points in "Gladstonian Fallacies," and wondered how long the young ass was likely to stay.

It was one of the Colonel's failings that he never realized that things once of great interest become out-of-date.

John soon admitted in quick succession the Hon. Percy Fitzpearce, Mr. Archie Pawling and Mr. Philip Bartram. He was a little surprised to find that each murmured that he was expected. Each entered with an handsome step and a hopeful countenance, stopped suddenly, and looked round in disgust. Each pressed her hand in sympathy. She wondered much.

The conversation that afternoon was interesting not so much by reason of the things said as by reason of the things thought and choked down in silence. The Colonel's few remarks on "Gladstonian Fallacies" developed as they were apt to do into a set speech, while Eva murmured at intervals her entire agreement. Lord Bobby also concurred with enthusiasm, and said he was surprised that the question could ever be disputed; but that did not check the flow of oratory. When Mrs. Rowen came in, there was some exciting manœuvring by each to drive the other four, over to her and get a few words quietly with Eva; it was an interesting affair, the tea mixing before the gun fire in a yacht race. As five o'clock approached each watched furtively for signs of the departure of the others. No gentleman who is a gentleman should make a call of more than half an hour. Lord Bobby mentioned thrilling things that were going on elsewhere, and Archie Pawling asked why he wasn't there. Lord Bobby remarked casually that he didn't care for such things. Mr. Fitzpearce remembered an engagement that Mr. Bartram had, but Mr. Bartram thanked him kindly and he said it had been postponed. The Colonel was engaged in annihilating only the third fallacy of Mr. Gladstone, and there were seven still to be dealt with, three of which were most outrageously fallacious. And Eva wondered more and more.

Each of them took a fourth cup of tea and sipped it cautiously, with an eye on the cup of his neighbor. Mrs. Rowen started off on the sixteenth subject of conversation, and for the ninety-second time Mr. Fitzpearce said ponderously that it was awfully jolly. Each, whenever he got a chance, looked into Eva's eyes with a look that meant unutterable worlds.

At about twenty past five, Lord Bobby began asking riddles, such as, "If a fish weighs ten pounds and half its own weight what does it weigh?" or "Why is mouse when it spins?"; but they bore it with grim fortitude. Nobody fled. Then came one of those ghostly silences which make one glance instinctively at the clock. Even Lord Bobby was without his usual sprightliness, and was gloomily stirring his spoon round in the half-cup of cold tea which would nevermore be empty. His replies to the Colonel were becoming abrupt, even snappy. At about a quarter to six, however, he saw a chance. The Colonel had rashly turned away for a moment to impress upon Percy Fitzpearce (whose chin was sinking deeper into his collar) the absurdity of the argument that moves the Irish Church——

"I'm as much annoyed about this," said Lord Bobby, softly, "as you are."

Eva looked surprised. "Did I look annoyed?"

"No, of course; but it is exasperating that these fellows should choose this particular time to come and do this, you know."

"This particular time?" she asked, puzzled.

"What astonishes me," he said, "is the way they can't see that we don't want them." He lowered his voice to a tender whisper. "Bertie has told me all about it."

"Has he?" said Eva, not at all pleased; it was the first time Bertie had been in such a hurry to announce the end.

"Yes, he told me, so it can't be helped now. You must try to forgive him. Poor fellow, he was awfully cut up about it all!"

"It is very good of you to take his part like this."

"Oh, I can afford to, can't it? We can be generous to the vanquished." He paused, and then went on, earnestly. "After what you know I know, is it necessary for me to tell you that?"——

"Well, Miss Rowen, let me recapitulate briefly the last two points I made?" said the Colonel, turning back to her.

She sighed and looked at the clock. She had an uncomfortable feeling that something was happening which she didn't understand, and even the Colonel's arguments were a relief after the mysterious solemnity of Lord Bobby. Oh, where was Bertie? Bertie could have saved her from all this. With some sense of terror she saw Percy Fitzpearce move himself sideways on to a chair near to her. A message of great import was in his eye, so she devoted all her attention to the Colonel, but heard Percy's voice murmuring, "Confounded nuisance these fellows staying on like this, eh?"

She thought she could answer that. "Yes, isn't it?" she said, heartily, and he glowed with satisfaction.

Pawling and Bertram watched this manœuvre, and were racking their brains to devise a method of leaving Mrs. Rowen without rudeness and crossing to Eva. Each was sorely grieved to see her thus bored by others when he knew that all the afternoon the poor girl had been yearning for one word from himself. It occurred to Eva that they were all asking for an invitation to dinner; but the thing was so unlikely. All the little customary hints, such as "Dear me, how time does fly!" or "Oh, don't go yet!" had long ago been used up, and direct attacks seemed only to confirm the individual attacked in his intention of remaining. And wherever she looked she met eyes fixed upon her with melting tenderness. It was like some hideous nightmare. And the Colonel had only reached his seventh fallacy, with Home Rule still to come. Oh, Bertie, Bertie! Why did you go away?

It was getting on toward six-thirty when John entered and announced Mr. Bertie Pihlinghame. Her heart leaped and she rose and went toward him. The Colonel and Lord Bobby and the Hon. Percy Fitzpearce and Mr. Pawling and Mr. Bartram all showed considerable surprise.

Bertie looked round with a grave face. Then he shook hands first with Eva, then with Mrs. Rowen, and then with the heroic Eva. He had a pleasant word for each. Then he returned to Eva, and down on a sofa by her side, and, without saying anything, looked solemnly at the Colonel. The astonishment on five faces changed to wrath and disgust, and that in turn gave way to pleasant though grim smiles. With regret, they realized that, in a lady's drawing-room, physical violence was out of the question.

"Ah—ah—hem!" said the Colonel, feeling his position acutely. "Bless my soul, how late it is! Dear, dear! How one forgets time! I—I am afraid I must be going now, really."

"Must you really?" said Mrs. Rowen.

"Er—I really must—er—good afternoon!"

"Good night!" said Eva; and the Colonel hurried out, jammed his hat on his head, and slashing at things with his umbrella all the way home.

The same process was repeated four times. But the four did not go straight home. There was a council of war on the pavement.

"Let's thrash him!" said Pawling savagely.

"Yes," said Bartram, gripping his stick.

"And have it all made public and look bigger fools than we are!" said Fitzpearce.

"If possible," said Lord Bobby; and in mournful silence they dispersed.

"I didn't hear you come," said Eva, when the room was cleared. "Didn't you?" said Bertie. As a matter of fact, he had arrived at 4 and sat in the library while John reported how things were going. "I came because I had heard that you were about to accept the first proposal you got. Is that case I'm not too late," he continued, going down gracefully on one knee. "I have the honor to lay at your feet the heart and hand of a most humble, repentant and devoted slave, trusting that the errors of the past may be but the more convincing proof of the certainty of a blameless future."

"Did you tell all—all—those people to come here?"

"I told them our engagement was over."

"Well," she said, shuddering, "you must never do such a thing again."

"Darling, I never will!"

The wounds in four bosoms healed with time, but the Colonel never spoke to Bertie again.

And in after years, when people heard that this was so, they came to Bertie and said, wistfully: "Tell us, oh, tell us how you managed it!"

"In case I am not too late, I have the honor to lay at your feet the heart and hand of a most devoted slave."

"You are the man I used to think of as a friend I could trust."

"I didn't hear you come," said Eva.

Girl's First Book Wins a Rich Husband.

Banker Macnaughton's Romantic Reading of Myra Kelly's "Little Citizens," Which Caused Him to Forget All About Wall Street, and Seek the Hand That Penned Such Delightful Truths About Real Children.

MR. ALLAN MACNAUGHTON

MISS MYRA KELLY

MATCHMAKERS are usually women, occasionally men, but one match was made by a book.

When the engagement of Allan Macnaughton and Miss Myra Kelly was whispered every one who knew them thought of "Little Citizens."

"You remember how he enjoyed it," said one. "He told me he had read it three times and by snatches."

"He told me he supposed a woman clever enough to write those stories had outlived youth and beauty and amiability. He said he had noticed that by the time a woman had lived enough to write well she had lost all her attractiveness. Allan can be very disagreeable when he chooses."

"I had thought him an incorrigible bachelor."

"So he would have remained had he not fallen in love with"——

"With Myra Kelly?"

"With 'Little Citizens.'"

One year ago Miss Kelly was one of the toiling teachers in a public school on the East Side, New York. Young—to be accurate, at the rosy age of twenty-one—pretty, in an unthralled wild rose sort of way, and shy—except with her dirty, noisy little charges from the slums—and with a nature so serene, so healthfully amiable, that the stories of the girl who smiled whatever the weather or mood or elements, made the irritable mothers at home more irritable and brought upon their offspring, who talked incessantly of the Knight teacher, many an application of slipper.

At the same time Allan Macnaughton, president of the Standard Coach Horse Company, formerly director of the Wool Exchange and one time concerned in the management of the Tradesmen's National Bank, a man of large fortune and colossal ambition, member of many clubs, sought after by the makers-up of cotillions, oppressed by his multitude of cares, ordered his man to pack up a few things and "be out to the place." His man required no more explicit instructions. "The place" was Mr. Macnaughton's perfectly appointed training farm, the 200 acres bought from the William Walter Phelps estate.

When Mr. Macnaughton had wellnigh worked his brain fag, he did not take passage on the first steamer for Europe. A trip to the place at Teaneck, a mute conversation with the shining thoroughbreds in the stables, a romp with the white and gold Scotch collies, and quiet drowsy evenings on the wide veranda in the pine-scented dusk, served the purpose as well, and on the morning when he awoke, rested and equal once more to the diverse interests of Broadway and the Street, he was within a half hour of it.

Bought Miss Kelly's Book.

On this day, when it had been especially evacuating on the Street, when men had let fall the mask of a thin civilization and, grown primitive under the stress of the money fight, said cruel things and done evil deeds to one another, all in the name of "business methods," Allan Macnaughton was tired. Every nerve was wracked, his head ached, in his heart was a smouldering resentment against all men. He was white-faced and weary when he reached the ferry station. The doors were closed. Gatemen in blue guarded them. The boats were not in sight. Mr. Macnaughton turned to the bookstand. His tired eyes absently ran over the titles. The roving glance was arrested by the erring finger of the dealer on a thick book wrapped in a pale blue paper. The dealer's voice fell upon his dulled ear.

"The best thing in the market."

"I don't read novels," said the banker peevishly.

"This ain't a novel. It's about children. It's something different from anything you've ever read."

"About children?" The phrase attracted him ever so slightly. He had always liked children. He nodded to the dealer. He drew out a heavy purse. A moment later he was turning the leaves carelessly, his hat drawn low over his eyes to screen them from the setting sun.

The frontispiece caught and fascinated his eye. A slender girl with delicate features and roguishly sympathetic face sat on a rough wooden chair listening to a story told by an eager faced boy, a lad unmistakably of the slums. One arm was around the waist of a tall, lank girl who stood beside her. A hand rested clumsily on the boy's shoulder. His features relaxed in a smile. The picture bewitched him into forgetfulness of the battle of the beasts in view on the Street that afternoon. The fingers carelessly turning the leaves stopped at this description:

Forgot the Bulls and Bears.

But Morris Mojeisky, whose love for Teacher was greater than the combined loves of all the other children, had as yet no present to bestow. The knowledge saddened all his hours, and was the more maddening because it could in novice be shared by Teacher, who noticed his altered bearing and tried with all sorts of artful beguilements to make him happy and at ease. But her efforts served only to increase his unhappiness and his love. And he loved her. Oh, how he loved her. Since first his dreading eyes had clung for a breath's space to her "like man's shoes" and had then crept timidly upward past a black skirt, a "from silk" apron, a red "jumper," and "from gold" chain to her "right face," she had been mistress of his heart of hearts.

That was more than three months ago. And well he remembered the day. His mother had washed him horribly and had taken him into the big red schoolhouse, so familiar from the outside but so full of unknown terrors within. After his dusty little shoes had stumbled over the threshold he had passed from ordeal to ordeal, until at last he was torn in mute and white-faced despair from his mother's skirts.

The sunshine smote his timid eyes, the laughter smote his timid heart, and he turned to flee. But the door was shut, the large boy gone, and despair took him for its own.

Down upon the floor he dropped and wailed and wept and kicked. It was then he heard for the first time the voice which now he loved. A hand was forced between his aching body and the floor, and a voice said:

"Why, my little chap, you mustn't cry like that. What's the matter?"

The hand was gentle and the question kind, and these, combined with a faint perfume, suggestive of drug stores and barber shops—but nicer than either—made him uncover his hot little face. Kneeling beside him was a lady, and he forced his eyes to that perilous ascent: from shoes to skirt, from skirt to jumper, from jumper to face they trailed in dread uncertainty, but at the face they stopped. They had found rest.

There the banker closed the book and reflected. Yes, it was so. He had felt just so that dim day, faintly remembered, when he had been taken to school the first time. The aged lady who had written the book knew the hearts of boys and their capacity for suffering. She was a good old person. Doubtless she had grandsons, perhaps great-grandsons of her own. A vision of a stout, placid, white-haired woman, with benign face framed in a cap of lace ruffles, floated before his eyes and above each page as he turned it.

In the chapter, "The Land of Heart's Desire," he read:

"'Central Park is awfully pretty,' Sadie soliloquized, as she lay on her back and watched the waving branches and blue sky far above. 'Awful pretty. I likes us should live here all the time.'

"'Well,' began Ignatius Aloysius Diamantstein, in slight disparagement of his rival's powers as a cicerone, 'well, I ain't seen no lions, nor no rubber-neck boat birds. Und I ain't had no rides on nothings. Und I ain't heard no hollers, neither.'

As if in answer to this criticism, there arose upon the road beyond the trees a snorting, panting noise, growing momentarily louder, and culminating, just as East Side nerves were strained to breaking point, into a long, hoarse and terrifying yell. There was a flash of red, a cloud of dust, three other tools of agony, and the thing was gone. Gone, too, were the explorers, and gone their peaceful rest. To the distant end of the field they flew, led by the pale-stricken chaperon—a chaperon in the large and reassuring person of Becky Zelmonowsky, the class idiot.

For Becky, poor child, though twelve years old and of an aspect eminently calculated to inspire trust in those who had never held speech with her, was a member of the first recipr class only until such time as room could be found for her in some of the institutions where such unfortunates are bestowed. In a secluded corner, near the restaurant, the chaperon was run to earth by her breathless charges.

"I seen the lion," she panted over and over. "I seen the fierce, big, red lion, and I don't know where is my mamma."

Simply Had to Finish It.

The resting banker ordered the lights turned on on the veranda that he might read the end of the adventures of the East Side visitors to Central Park.

Over the rocks and grass the army charged toward bliss unutterable, strewing their path with overturned and howling babies of prosperity, who, clumsy from many nurses and much pampering, failed to make way. Fast all barriers, accident or official, they pressed, nor halted to draw rein or breath until they were established, bedded, upon the wailing swan boat.

Three minutes later they were standing outside the railings of the landing and regarding through veiled tears the placid lake, the sunny slopes of grass and trees, the brilliant sky and the gleaming "rubberneck boat bird," which, as they described, "made go its legs," but only, as he had omitted to mention, for money. So there they stood, seven sorrowful little figures, engulfed in the joyless despair of childhood and the bitterness of poverty. For these were the children of the poor, and full well they knew that money was not to be diverted from its mission; that carfare could not be squandered on bliss.

Becky's woe was so strong and loud that the bitter wailings of the others served merely as its background. But Patrick Brennan cared not at all for the general despair. His remorseful eyes never strayed from the bowed figure of Eva Gonorowsky, for whose plenitude and honor he had striven so long and vainly. Slowly she conquered her sobs, slowly she raised her daisy-decked head, deliberately she blew her small pink nose, softly she approached her conquered knight, gently and all untruthfully she faltered, with yearning eyes on the majestic swans:

"Don't you have no sad feelings, Patrick. I ain't got none. Ain't I told you from long how I don't need no rubberneck boat bird rides? I don't need 'em. I don't need 'em. I—with a sob of passionate longing—I've got all times a awful scare over 'em. Let's go home, Patrick. Becky needs she should see her mamma, and I guess I needs my mamma, too."

Mr. Macnaughton read until he had finished the book, and his dreams were filled, not with visions of slaughter of princes and men on the floor of the Exchange, but with dream faces of gentle Eva Gonorowsky and her cousin Sadie; of plaintive little Morris Mogelewsky and doughty Isaac Borrachsohn. And next day on the floor of the Exchange they flitted past him dreamfully, and the next time he went to the farm he read again the grave and gay little stories of their adventures in childland told by Teacher.

His entertained largely at his place in the country. He was an indulgent host, and on the occasion of his giving a Horse Show at last craftily dance there, when a friend began saying, "If you don't mind, old chap, my wife would like to bring a friend with her, a charming girl"——

"Certainly, old man. Glad to see her, ly," he said. "I understand that you are Just have my secretary send her an invitation, wont you?" he replied. "What did you think of that drop in wool?"

Thought Her Her Own Granddaughter.

So it befell that on the night when the host, busy about his hospitality, was presented to his friend's wife's friend, he noted that she was a wild rose sort of a girl, with an engaging smile and a sweetly shy manner, but he did not hear her name. He danced with her, as was his duty, but it was not until they were at the table that a babbling neighbor interested him.

"That pretty young thing in pink is Myra Kelly."

"Myra Kelly? A namesake of the author of 'Little Citizens'?"

The friend stared and smiled, answering "Her granddaughter."

When next he saw her alone Miss Kelly's host hastened to her side. "I am so glad to have the honor of your presence, Miss Kelly," he said. "I understand that you are the granddaughter and namesake of that wonderful woman who wrote 'Little Citizens.'"

A suppressed titter from the girl at Miss Kelly's elbow, Miss Kelly's hot blush and embarrassed smile and a masculine interruption: "I say, old man, some one's been hoaxing you," bewildered the host.

It required a long tete-a-tete on the veranda and much ascribing to himself of asinine qualities before Mr. Macnaughton's lost dignity was restored. It was noticed that from that moment he made every effort to remove the impression of stupidity he feared his blunder might have caused.

At every society assemblage at the country house Miss Kelly was at least an invited guest. Frequently he was the host of box parties at the theatres or opera, in which invariably Miss Kelly was one.

As acquaintance progressed to friendship and friendship waxed more intimate, Mr. Macnaughton repeated the words of Dr. Ingraham, "I cannot imagine why you go to that place. They are an ungrateful lot of brutes."

"They are fond of me."

And Mr. Macnaughton had only to say—for he had visited her school in the slums—in the words of Dr. Ingraham:

"That proves the contagion of mental station."

One evening while driving in the park behind his finest pair of bays from the training farm, he said:

"In one respect your book disappointed me."

"And that?"

"Why didn't you make Teacher marry Dr. Ingraham?"

And the author replied softly, "Perhaps she will. She was ready to resign at the end of the book."

"And are you ready to resign?"

"Oh—Oh——" said Teacher, "how personal you are.

But proposals are never impersonal, nor are answers, and Mr. Macnaughton and Miss Kelly returned from their drive supremely satisfied with the world and each other.

This match, made by a book, is to be ratified by a marriage some time next Autumn, probably at the home of Dr. J. H. Kelly, Miss Kelly's father, in New York City.

How One Jaguar Held Up Four Passenger Trains in Ute Pass

Escaping from Its Wrecked Circus Cage in Ute Pass Tunnel, the Jaguar Stops All Railroad Traffic for Hours, While the Frightened Passengers Scramble Up the Steep Sides of the Canyon to Safety.

The Entrance to Ute Pass and the Pass Itself, Where the Passengers Fled from the Jaguar.

Mouth of the Tunnel Out of Which the Jaguar Darted After the Railroad Accident.

Colorado Springs, July 17.

ON the northerly slope of Pike's Peak is Ute Pass, where the Ute Indians in the old days used to come down from Utah to worship the strange rocks in the Garden of the Gods. Through this wild canyon runs the old trail, where many a stage coach has been held up. A railroad now runs through Ute Pass, and yesterday five passenger trains were held up there by a wild desperado—not a highwayman, but a South American jaguar. And this is how it happened:

The circus train of the Gaskill show was creeping along the steep grades of the Colorado Midland when it came to the narrow tunnel at the summit of the pass. Now the circus cars are longer and rather wider than the usual freight cars. In the tunnel is a sharp curve, and as the front truck of the first long car travelled around the curve it scraped the sides of the car against the tunnel wall. Scrape, scratch, crash and a hole was crushed in on the roof and sides of the car.

In this particular car were two interesting travellers—an able-bodied polar bear and a snarling, irritable, nimble-limbed South American jaguar. The jaguar had sniffed the mountain air fragrant with wild flowers and forest and peered out of his cage with yearning eyes. Suddenly the wall of his prison fell away, and with a scream of surprise he sprang to the opening.

As all this grating and grinding, with signals from the trainmen, brought the circus train to a standstill, the big cat saw an excellent prospect of liberty. But before he could leap through the breach in his cage he was confronted by his keeper, armed with a revolver full of noisy blank cartridges.

This trainer, John Blakely, had a compartment of the same car to himself, and next to that occupied by the jaguar was the home en route of a big polar bear. These two animals here each other the fiercest kind of hatred. John Blakely's first thought when the crash came was to prevent these valuable animals getting together and killing each other. He was also fully alive to the danger in which he himself stood, as last December the jaguar had killed its former keeper, Homer Johnson, and there was no one with the show who would enter its cage under any circumstances.

Into a Blaze of Blank Cartridges.

So John Blakely at once opened fire with his blank cartridges right in the face of the huge and excited cat, with an occasional shot in the bear's face. Bruin was easily bluffed into lying down in the farthest corner of his compartment with his paws over his tender nose, but the moment the trainer's cartridges gave out the jaguar leaped through the opening.

As the car was partly within the entrance to the tunnel whose sides and ceiling confronted him, the animal did not at once strike for the mountains, but took refuge under the car, where he crouched, screeching and spitting till the whole canyon rang with his spiteful and blood-curdling menace.

In the meantime four other trains loaded with passengers ran into the canyon, to be stopped by the wrecked circus train. Every passenger aboard could hear the jaguar's shrieks, and to add to the panic, a trainman went back shouting:

"Circus train stalled in the tunnel! Animals loose!"

The polar bear having been safely imprisoned in his apartment, the jaguar was the only animal loose; but he was making preparations to throw all the five trainloads into a panic.

Try to Bag the Fierce Jaguar.

Show people are used to such accidents. They speedily set about trying to bag the spitting, screeching big cat. They brought forward the canvas of one of the big tents, spread it over the car under which the jaguar was crouching, drew down the sides all around and fastened them down. Then Captain Ricardo and one of the women performers, professionally known as "Madame Florence the Fearless," armed themselves with two revolvers each—one loaded with blanks and the other with real bullets—and prepared to bag their dangerous pet.

A small temporary cage with door open had been placed under the tent. After a fierce fusillade of blank cartridges—which increased the panic of the passengers to the point of hysterics—they succeeded in driving the jaguar into the small cage. Then, just at the critical moment, the train had to start with a grinding jerk that compelled the cat's captors to hurry out from under the wheels before they had closed the cage door.

In a flash the agile jaguar was out of the cage, out from under the tent, out of the tunnel entrance and leaping up the side of the canyon.

Some of the passengers of the next train in the rear of the circus train had alighted foolishly in their fright. When they saw the jaguar leaping dangerously up and along the steep canyon side they scrambled in all directions for safety.

Seeing the savage animal lose its hold on the rocks and fall screeching down beside the train, Miss Delmore, a passenger, took to the rocks herself. She managed to scramble twenty feet up the side of a cliff. Unable to proceed any farther, she looked down to see what the jaguar was doing.

When Miss Delmore saw that the animal was crouching for a spring up that same cliff she nearly fainted. She quite lost her foothold and fell to the roadbed right in front of the startled beast, breaking her left leg.

Gashed Passenger's Shoulder.

On the spur of the moment the jaguar changed its mind about scaling the cliff. It made a snarling dart back for the tunnel. Joseph Bennett, of Colorado Springs, another passenger, being in the way, received the brute's whole weight on his shoulder. His clothes were nearly torn off, and in a second his shoulder, arm and one leg were frightfully gashed by the animal's claws.

Again the jaguar changed its mind and made some futile leaps up the sides of the canyon. But Captain Ricardo and Trainer Blakely had found two brave volunteer assistants in John Williams and Samuel Burns, who were armed with revolvers and sent through the short tunnel to hold that exit against the animal's assault when he should be driven in.

Never had a "hold-up" by armed highwaymen created half such a panic. Every one of those several hundred passengers in the four trains, and performers in the circus train, seemed to anticipate himself or herself to be the jaguar's specially selected victim.

Captain Ricardo and the trainer had a hot fight to drive the beast into the tunnel. When they had accomplished that feat the uproar was worse than ever. As the beast leaped from one end to the other seeking liberty its screeches mingled with the revolver shots of those at both entrances, the combination of noises being many times multiplied in volume by the tunnel's echoing walls. In addition, the elephants trumpeted, the lions roared and the tigers screeched.

While Miss Delmore, with her broken leg, and Joseph Bennett, bleeding from head to foot from the cat's scratches, lay beside the tracks in the canyon, the fight went on. The tunnel was filled with smoke from the brace of active revolvers at either entrance.

The car with tent covering had not moved far. The problem was to get the beast under the tent again and into the small cage. To this end the two men at either end moved toward each other as they fired. Between volleys from their weapons they could see the jaguar leaping up the tunnel walls, from side to side and across the ceiling, all the time screeching and spitting. The foothold was bad, even for the beast's sharp claws. After awhile it could be seen to limp, and finally it ceased its attempts on the walls and sought refuge under the tent-covered car.

Pandemonium in the Tunnel.

Instantly then the sides were fastened down, and the former tactics of Captain Ricardo and "Madame Florence the Fearless" resorted to. This time there was no hitch. Whining and completely cowed, the jaguar lay on the floor of the small cage, and soon was back in his proper quarters.

The beast's feet were bleeding. Going back through the tunnel with a lantern, Captain Ricardo and his veterans of the battle saw the walls all scratched, and on the floor they found several of the jaguar's claws, which had been torn out in its wild efforts to cling to the masonry. It will be a long time before "Spitfire," as the showmen have aptly named the beast, will walk about comfortably, and probably never will it regain these weapons which made it so formidable.

For nearly an hour the jaguar had held up the five trains. It was now possible to give some attention to the wounded. Captain Ricardo's shoulder and hand had been badly lacerated by one of the beast's rushes, and it was found that Joseph Bennett had narrowly escaped having his arm torn off, in addition to his other injuries.

A doctor among the passengers made the wounded ones as comfortable as possible while the trains were resuming their trip to Colorado Springs, where all received prompt surgical attention. For Captain Ricardo and Joseph Bennett one of the biggest jobs of cauterizing on record had to be performed, in efforts to prevent blood-poisoning, which is still feared.

"A young and charming widow slides suddenly into view."

TWO ON AN ALP—OR, THE WAY THE

SCENE: A ledge at the foot of a small glacier in the Bernese Alps. A deeply blue sky and the snow tinged with rose color by the approach of sunset. Intense stillness everywhere, broken by a scream and a fall of stones, in the midst of which MRS. GUILFORD, a young and charming widow, slides suddenly into view, frantically trying to arrest her downward course with her alpenstock.

MRS. GUILFORD (as she lands on the ledge with a jerk). Oh—h—h!

VOICE ABOVE. Hullo! Hullo! Are you safe?

MRS. G. (half-weeping). I don't know!

VOICE. Hold on, for Heaven's sake!

MRS. G. There is nothing to hold on to!

VOICE (more distant). Wait a moment!

MRS. G. Oh! Don't go away and leave me!

VOICE (more distant still). Of course not!

MRS. G. But you are going!

VOICE. No! I'm coming! Look out!

Another fall of stone and the owner of the voice, CAPTAIN SIDNEY BURNETT a good-looking man of forty, lands at the other end of the ledge. He has a thick rope strapped to his shoulders and a rope knotted round his waist.

MRS. G. Oh! Why did you?

CAPTAIN B. I couldn't leave you here alone. (Anxiously.) You are not hurt? (Catching her hands.)

MRS. G. Not in the least. It was so awkward for me to slip . . . at such an easy place, too!

CAPTAIN B. Thank Heaven it was at no worse a place! You might have——. (Hoarsely.) Evelyn! I can't bear to think of it!

MRS. G. (blushing and pulling her hands away). Captain Burnett!

CAPTAIN B. Oh! I forgot for the moment that we were not on speaking terms. . . . Well, you must put up with my society for a time, till the guide returns.

MRS. G. Returns? (Sharply.) Where has he gone?

CAPTAIN B. For another rope. (Untying the one round him.)

MRS. G. What is wrong with that one?

CAPTAIN B. A bit frayed.

MRS. B. But you came down by it?

CAPTAIN B. I doubt if it would bear a return journey. You—you are not quite a fairy, and I am tolerably heavy.

MRS. G. (anxiously). Will he be long?

CAPTAIN B. Not very. There is a hut not far off. . . . Oh! (bitterly) you wont have to bear the infliction of my presence long!

MRS. G. I never said your presence was an infliction.

CAPTAIN B. You looked straight through me when you came out of the hotel this morning and saw who it was you had proposed to join in his climb.

MRS. G. (embarrassed). The guide mispronounced your name. I thought you were a stranger, or——

CAPTAIN B. ——Or you would never have come? Oh, I guessed that! Well, I will get as far from you as space will permit, and you need not address another word to me. . . . You had better sit down. You will have some time to wait.

MRS. G. (rather proudly). You should not have troubled to come. It was not necessary.

CAPTAIN B. (shrugging his shoulders). Perhaps. We shall see. Anyway, here I am, and here I must stay, unless you wish me to risk ascending by the frayed rope!

MRS. G. (horror-stricken). Good Heavens! No!

CAPTAIN B. Then take my advice and sit down quietly. I wont trouble you, I give you my word.

MRS. G. (hesitating). You—you?

CAPTAIN B. I am going to the other end of the platform, and I shall sit with my back to you, and you can imagine I am not there.

MRS. G. I am not good at imagining.

CAPTAIN B. Indeed? I should have thought otherwise. In the old days——

MRS. G. (plaintively). Oh, go away!

CAPTAIN B. Certainly.

[He retires to the far end of the ledge, where he sits with his back to MRS. GUILFORD. She looks after him for a moment, then bites her lip, and after hesitating, sits slowly down, also with her back to CAPTAIN BURNETT. A long silence ensues. MRS. GUILFORD turns her head several times, and looks wistfully at CAPTAIN BURNETT, but he never moves. The silence is intense. Finally MRS. GUILFORD'S lip begins to quiver and the tears fall from her eyes. She leans her head against the rock and sobs quietly. CAPTAIN BURNETT springs quickly to his feet and comes to her, in great agitation.

CAPTAIN B. Evelyn! Evelyn! What is it? Surely you were not hurt, after all? (Kneeling by her.)

MRS. G. No, no! (Sobbing.) It is the silence I can't bear . . . it is awful!

CAPTAIN B. (remorsefully). What a brute I am! I ought to have known! The horror of stillness . . . it gets into one's nerves and brain—it seizes one by the throat and chokes one! (Sitting by her and gazing into vacancy.) It chills the blood in one's veins and sends the courage oozing out of one's finger-tips . . . I know!

MRS. G. How do you know? (Watching him breathlessly.)

CAPTAIN B. (grimly). I've experienced it. (Sharply.) I was lost on the veldt for two nights and a day—it seemed an eternity! (Slowly, with a deep terror dawning in his eyes.) It wasnt the hunger or the thirst; it was the horror of loneliness, the appalling silence, that made me afraid.

MRS. G. (touching his hand). Don't think of it. Besides, I am sure you were never—afraid.

CAPTAIN B. (in a half-whisper). I was, I tell you! I whimpered like a frightened child in the dark. I think the Inferno must be like that—deadly silence.

MRS. G. Don't think of it! Don't talk of it!

CAPTAIN B. (passing his hand over his eyes). Forgive me! I ought not to have spoken of it.

MRS. G. (softly). I am glad you told me.

CAPTAIN B. That I had been—afraid? I remember. . . . You once called me a coward.

MRS. G. That is ungenerous of you! Do you never forget?

CAPTAIN B. Not easily. Now, you——

MRS. G. What makes you think that I forget easily?

CAPTAIN B. Well, you had apparently forgotten my very existence this morning when we met.

MRS. G. (blushing and embarrassed). I hadn't, of course—only . . . Well, I wanted to do this climb alone. It is such an easy one; but the landlord advised me to join a Mr. Somebody—I didn't catch the name—and his daughter, who were taking a guide for safety's sake. He pointed them out to me last night—a pleasant-faced old man and a middle-aged daughter.

CAPTAIN B. Most reassuring companions.

MRS. G. Then I came out this morning and saw no one but the guide and—and—you.

CAPTAIN B. And your assurance took to itself wings and fled? You retained only sufficient to freeze me with a glance? You might like to know that the old man and his daughter backed out when they found that recent bad weather had made this ascent scarcely as safe as usual.

MRS. G. (half-indignant). Why didn't you tell me so?

CAPTAIN B. It was wrong of me, perhaps; but I was angry with you—I have been angry with you for days, you know—and I didn't think you could come to much harm with the guide and myself to look after you. . . . There was another reason, too.

MRS. G. What?

CAPTAIN B. I hadn't seen you for so long, and I couldn't resist the temptation of being your companion for a whole day.

MRS. G. It was taking an unfair advantage.

CAPTAIN B. Of what? Your pride? I saw at a glance it was only that which prevented you returning to the hotel after the first hundred yards. I've suffered a lot for your pride, Evelyn, and I didn't see why, for once, your pride should not suffer for me. . . . There was nothing to prevent your going back, you know. You were not obliged to come.

MRS. G. (angrily) You are ungenerous!

CAPTAIN B. I am afraid I am.

MRS. G. You should not have let me come. See what has happened!

CAPTAIN B. I repented my fault most bitterly for the few awful moments in which I feared for your safety; but since——

MRS. G. Do you mean that you are glad, glad that I am in this—this horrible situation?

CAPTAIN B. (coolly). No; but I am glad that I am!

MRS. G. (turning her back). Oh, oh! I—I——— Don't speak to me!

CAPTAIN B. (obediently). Very well.

How It Feels to Fight for Your Life on the Trucks of a Flying Express

Clinging with One Hand to Their Swaying, Jolting Perch, and Battling Desperately with the Other Hand and Feet, a Tramp and a Railroader Fight One of the Most Peculiar and Shocking Duels Ever Heard of.

The "D. & R. G. Flyer." It Was While Riding on the Trucks of One of the Passenger Coaches of This Train that Barnett and the Tramps Fought.

Denver, Col., July 27.

THE most relentless and shocking struggle for life between two desperate men ever heard of, and under conditions themselves so dangerous as to appall the ordinary mind, is thrillingly described by the vanquished participant, who lies in the hospital with one foot amputated at the ankle.

Most persons have heard of the habit tramps have of riding from one city to another upon the dirt and grease coated trucks of freight and passenger cars, clinging to the springless iron framework just above the grinding wheels, suffocated by dust and pelted by flying stones from the roadbed, while one second's loss of grip or presence of mind would mean to be mangled out of possible recognition.

Now imagine two men in such a position, where there is hardly room for one, each resenting the other's presence and fighting with feet and hands to dislodge him from the truck as it bumps along at the rate of a mile a minute in a blinding and suffocating cloud of dust. That is the experience related by A. A. Barnett, a railroad laborer, who was vanquished in that fight and yet lives to tell the tale which follows here.

By A. A. Barnett, Whom a Tramp Kicked from the Truck of a Moving Train Under Its Wheels.

IT was this way. I was out of a job and thought I could find work in Canon City. I had no money to pay my fare. So I kept my eyes open for a chance to crawl under a passenger car, when none of the trainmen were looking, and lie on the trucks.

I found my chance and took it. The trucks were covered with grease and dirt. My head bumped against the bottom of the car, and I tell you it was a close fit. I got a good grip on the iron braces and waited for the train to pull out.

Pretty soon the bell rang, and just as the wheels began to turn I felt a hand on my foot, and then a ragged and dirty old tramp, with a stubble of beard all over his face, jumped on top of me where I lay.

I didn't dare speak loud for fear the trainmen would get me. But I gave that tramp a kick and growled at him:

"Get out. This berth's engaged."

"Get out, yourself," says he, and took me by the collar.

We had it hot for a minute, he choking me and I landing on him with both feet. Then I saw that the train was moving so fast nobody could get off without being run over, so I said:

"All right, you swab; take your dirty hooks out of my neck and I'll let you ride."

"You'll let me ride, will you?" says he. "Well, that's more'n I'll let you do."

"Oh," says I, givin' him a kick on the shin, "so you're the president of the road. I always wanted to kick a railroad president good and hard, and here's where you get it."

Then we went at it tooth and nail. Both of us had to have one, with one hand at least, for dear life. All either of us could do was to claw and smash with the other hand and kick with both feet. The tramp wasn't so very big, but he was wiry and a lively scrapper.

Choked by Dust and Cinders.

"But we couldn't hold the pace long on account of the dust. My eyes got full of it, and I had to shut them. In a minute I was out of breath, but when I opened my mouth I choked so I thought I was done for. The tramp seemed to stand it better—because he was used to it, I suppose.

"I quit kicking him, and the tramp coughed a bit and said:

"'If you got enough, what you waitin' for?'

I said nothing—I couldn't.

"'Come,' says he, 'fall off before I make you.'

Then I knew he would show me no mercy, and I said to myself that if I went under those wheels he would have to go with me. There was nothing to do but fight for it. But I let him pound me a spell while I struggled to get my breath.

It was awful on those trucks in the dark and dust, even without a dirty and ugly old tramp doing his best to shove me off under the wheels. We were up near the engine, with red-hot cinders flying about our face. The train must have been going a mile a minute. The dust wasn't all. The suction gathered up stones the size of an egg from the roadbed. I was pelted with these till my nose bled, and I was half stunned

Suddenly I got my legs around a brace and went for that tramp with both fists. I smashed him in the face and in the stomach. I couldn't open my eyes for the dust and sometimes I would break a knuckle on the iron work. But I managed to scrap that tramp to a standstill. He was breathin' hard and hangin' on with both hands. All this time we were sprawling all over each other, the space was so small. I wound up that round by digging my knee into the smell of his back, while I got my fingers in his shaggy hair and banged his face down on the iron truck frame.

Banged His Head on the Truck Frame.

I thought I had him unconscious, for he didn't move. But I yelled at him:

"If you'll swear to get off at the first stop, I'll let up on you."

He never stirred. Seein' him so quiet took the murder out of me, and I said to myself, I'd hold him safe and roll him off beyond the wheels the first time the train stopped. There was where I was foolish.

All of a sudden, when I was off my guard, he grabbed me by the neck and began banging my head against the truck frame. I was so surprised he nearly ended me right there.

"I've got you," he said, adding a long string of cuss words I never heard before. "Now you're done for. Will I kill you right now, or will you promise to get off at the next stop?"

Strange. I was gettin' my second wind, and suddenly I saw how I could play the foxy game with him and maybe get the best of him yet. I made up my mind that after all this trouble and danger I was going to be the one, not he, to get a free ride clear to Canon City. It never entered my mind—nor his, either, I guess—to make the best of the close quarters and go through together friendly. The first stop meant either murder or get off for one of us.

So I suddenly quit puttin' up any fight and says to the tramp:

"I've had enough. Keep your dirty hands an' feet off me an' I'll get off as soon as the train slows up enough."

"Is that square?" says he. "If not you can begin sayin' your prayers right now."

"On the level," says I. An' so we lay there all sprawled over each other, chokin' and gaspin' for breath, an' waitin' for the train to slow up.

"Hurry up," says he. "She's just pullin' up."

Right then the fireman raked out a lot of hot cinders, and by the flash of light they made I saw the tramp's jaw. Just where I thought it was. The next instant it was dark again. I drew back my right arm and sent my fist out for his jugular with all the force there was in me.

He must have moved, for I fetched him in the nose. Gosh! how the blood spurted. The tramp yelled murder, and, cussin' like nothin' I ever heard before, he was at me.

The train stopped, but I had no notion of gettin' off, an' he he knew it. Compared to the way we clawed and kicked and mauled each other now, all the scrappin' we'd been doing was child's play. Once I thought I had him with a jolt behind the ear, like. Those trainmen must be made of rubber. He came back with one that made me see stars, and followed it up with a kick that sent me half off the truck.

I remember that I saw the wheels starting again. I was dazed, but I struggled to get back beside the tramp. He kicked me in the face and I fell with my back on the rail. I had sense enough left to try and crawl out before the wheel caught me. But I felt it crunch my foot and that was the last I knew till I came to in Pueblo, where the trainmen took me.

The surgeons say my foot has got to come off where the wheels crushed it as soon as I'm strong enough. It's a pretty hard case for me, I'd like to see that tramp—but, gosh! I'll bet he hasn't a scratch on him. There's no use of an honest man tacklin' one of that breed.

"Mrs. G., you were brave—brave! I was so proud of you."

CAPTAIN WON THE WIDOW.---By Beatrice De Burgh.

[Another silence. Mrs. Guilford begins to look very pale, and she shivers once or twice, in spite of her efforts not to. Captain Burnett, after watching her anxiously, takes the cloak from his shoulders and pulls off his coat.

Captain B. Get up for a moment, please.

Mrs. G. (haughtily). Thank you . . . I am quite comfortable. (Her teeth begin to chatter.)

Captain B. (sharply). Get up, I tell you. (She does not move, so he takes her by the shoulders and carries her rise. When she is up he folds his coat for a seat.) Now, sit down again, please. (She looks up at him mistrustfully for a moment; then, as he puts out his hands as if to soothe her shoulders, she suddenly sits down. He then carefully folds his cape about her.) You may not know, but it's ice you are sitting on and leaning against. I don't want you to be ill.

Mrs. G. (submissively). Thank you.

Mrs. G. (picking up link from beside her). It is here.

Captain B. (taking it). Oh, thank you! (He fumbles at cuff for a time, she watching him; then, under his breath.) Damn!

Mrs. G. (demurely). Shall I fasten it?

Captain B. Will you?

[Kneels by her. As her hand touches his wrist he catches his breath and looks at her; but her eyes are cast down. He sets his lips firmly. As the opening of his sleeve is seen the beginning of a half-healed scar, Mrs. Guilford looks at it, as if fascinated.

Captain B. (puzzled by her delay). Is it too stiff? Can't you do it?

Mrs. G. Oh, yes! But (pushing his sleeve up), what is this?

Captain B. Nothing. An old wound.

Mrs. G. What an awful place!

Captain B. It isn't pleasant to look at. (Pulling down sleeve.) Shall I fasten it?

Mrs. G. No, no! (With head down.) I can do it; but my fingers are a little stiff with the cold, that is all.

Captain B.(taking her hands). Cold? They are like ice. . . . Poor little woman! (Rubs them.)

Mrs. G. I am sure you must be awfully cold, too. Want you sit here (moving up) and share your cloak? It is very wide.

Captain B. (looking at her intently). I don't think I need it.

Mrs. G. Please! Please do! It would make me so much happier.

Captain B. (eagerly). Would it? (She nods.) Then I will. (He sits by her side and draws the corner of the cloak round him.)

Mrs. G. (a little embarrassed). I—I want to tell you about this morning. . . . I didn't mean to be nasty, but I was so surprised. I didn't know you were here, and I hadn't seen you since—— (Breaks off in confusion.)

Captain B. I see. What would you have done if you had known I was here? Hidden away, I suppose, till you could escape me?

Mrs. G. I don't know.

Captain B. I think I do. Yet I couldn't do you any harm now. (After a pause) He is dead?

Mrs. G. (soberly). Yes, he is dead. You had heard?

Captain B. A few weeks since.

Mrs. G. It is more than a year.

Captain B. So long? You were awfully cruel to me that last night I saw you, Evelyn.

Mrs. G. (wistfully). Was I? It was so difficult. I was trying to do what was right—trying so hard—and when you, you had been so kind, so gentle, on whom I had relied so much for help and—friendship—came and offered me—— (Breaking off passionately.) Oh! you shouldn't have done it! You shouldn't have done it!

Captain B. I know. You poor little saint! I was a coward. You were quite right, but you might have made excuses for me. I knew you cared for me—for my help—and when they ordered me away, and I knew you were to be left there alone, tied to that brute, who had broken every one of his marriage vows a thousand times over——

Mrs. G. (interrupting). That did not absolve me from mine.

Captain B. I suppose not; but that did not occur to me. I wanted to take you away—out of it all; but I swear to you, Evelyn, I never meant to speak that night! I was going to leave you to your martyrdom—until you cried; and then—well, then, it was all out and done with in a moment. You—(very slowly)—you said some very cruel things; you were very hard on me.

Mrs. G. (half-sobbing). Oh, and wasn't I hard on myself, too? I was so disappointed! Your kindness was the only bright thing in my poor life—and you spoiled it. I might have gone on indefinitely, dreaming of friendship——

Captain B. You must have known long before that I loved you.

Mrs. G. Perhaps I did, but you had not said it. . . . I lulled my conscience to sleep with a song of friendship, and you woke it to consciousness with a lover's kiss. It could never sleep again. I had tried so hard to be brave—cruel, you call it—for you and for myself.

Captain B. For yourself? (Bending to her passionately.) Evelyn!

Mrs. G. (in a panic) Oh! . . . Shall I—shall I do up your cuff for you?

Captain B. (holding out arm mechanically). If you will, please.

Mrs. G. (touching scar). I—I know how you got that.

Captain B. How do you know?

Mrs. G. I watched for your name in the papers, and Neville told me himself.

Captain B. (gruffly). Young idiot! He made a fearful fuss about nothing.

Mrs. G. He didn't think it nothing, nor did his mother, nor yet the authorities. They say you are recommended for the Congress medal.

Captain B. Oh, come! That is rubbish.

Mrs G. You were brave—brave! I was so proud of you!

Captain B. (rising). Proud? You?

Mrs. G. (kneeling and keeping hold of his wrist). I kept saying, "That man cared for me once."

Captain B. Once?

Mrs. G. I—I loved you for it! There! (Bends suddenly and kisses his wrist.)

Captain B. (hoarsely). Evelyn! Don't! You're tempting me.

Mrs. G. What there was to forgive, I——

Captain B. My darling!

Voices above. Hola! Hola!

Captain B. The guide. What was the fool in such a hurry for? Evelyn! (Holding out arms.)

Mrs. G. (shyly). Do you think he can see?

Captain B. (ruthlessly). I have no doubt he can.

Mrs. G. (suddenly). I don't care if he can. I love you! I love you!

[Flings both arms round his neck and kisses him. A rope drops suddenly and she springs away.

Captain Burnett laughs.

Captain B. I believe he did see! Wont he be surprised? (Tenderly.) Remember, we were strangers when he left us. (Catching rope.)

Mrs G. (tossing her head and blushing). I don't care! (As he puts the rope round her.) Can't we go up together?

Captain B. I am afraid not. (Gives a tug at first rope, which drops from above. He examines the end.) Frayed through—I thought as much.

Mrs. G. (catching his arm). Oh! And you came down it? You might have—— (Stops and looks into the depths below her, horrified.)

Captain B. (gently). But I didn't.

Mrs. G. Oh, my dear! my dear! Why did you come at such risk?

Captain B. I thought you might be—lonely.

Mrs. G. So I have been lonely—so lonely, for years!

Voices above. Hola! Hola, Monsieur!

Captain B. Hola, Anton! Come, dearest, set your foot here (indicating a crevice), use your alpenstock, and go carefully. (Kisses her.) Hola, Anton! (Mrs. Guilford is drawn up out of sight, Burnett puts on his coat and cape, and in a moment the rope re-descends and he fastens it round him.)

Captain B. Hola, Anton!

Mrs. G. (above). Be careful! Oh, be careful, for—for my sake!

Captain B. For your sake—and my own, darling!

Mrs. G (above). Oh! The guide!

Captain B. (mounting slowly). He doesn't understand English.

CHAPTER I.

Happy in Their Love, Unconscious of Menacing Danger.

"WITH a military escort led by such a brave and experienced officer as yourself we shall have nothing to fear from the Bedouins of the desert," said Paul de Schaller, the engineer of the Franco-Foreign Society, to Captain Hardizan. Sitting at a table in the Casino at Gabes, Algeria, De Schaller had been explaining the progress of the work on the great canal which is piercing the heart of the desert to flood the Sahara with a vast inland sea. "My dear Captain," he exclaimed, as he rolled up his maps, "we shall both live to see a French fleet in the Sahara Sea, where these nomad tribes are now plundering caravans and murdering our workmen on the desert sands."

Captain Hardizan wandered leisurely away from the conference with the engineer, dismissing, for the moment, the responsibilities of the expedition which was to provide a safe tour of inspection of the desert canal. Leisurely, but not aimlessly, he sauntered along, for he soon encountered, as, indeed, he expected to, a young woman who seemed equally careless in her stroll.

Marie Lauri was a French girl of eighteen, but she had no Parisian aspect, and her appearance was quite as distinct from rusticity. She was both conventional and unconventional in manner and dress—the cultured restriction of the town and the natural freedom of the country blending charmingly. Marie was the daughter of Lieutenant Lauri, commandant of the garrison and prison at Gabes.

At a former time there had been extensive government works in this region, with thousand of natives, some employed and others antagonistic, to keep under discipline; so a prison like a fortress had been built; and now, although for years Gabes had been all but deserted, the prison remained in charge of Lieutenant Lauri with a handful of soldiers and only once in a while a prisoner.

"Hadjar Made One Last Effort and the Upper Part of His Body Emerged from the Orifice Ten Feet Above the Water."

Lauri was a widower with one child, Marie, whom he had sent to a French convent school for education, and who had but lately come back to him. It was a relief to the girl's loneliness when the new expedition arrived to enliven Gabes. And now, with the departure of the troop, the place would be drearier than ever. If all but Captain Hardizan were to go and he remain the prospect would not be gloomy; for a fortnight had sufficed to bring love to the officer and maiden. He was determined and she was willing that they should part as betrothed sweethearts. The Captain had obtained her father's consent, and now to get her own.

What need to tell in detail how, in the fading daylight of a grove of palms, the troth was plighted? Hardizan had the frankness of a soldier, and Marie had the naivete of a child. They came quickly to an understanding that, when the expedition should return to Gabes, they would be married. After that, Hardizan and Marie talked of the journey on which he was to set out next day. She was apprehensive of danger. He laughed at her fears.

"Ah," she sighed, "but I know the fate of the last expedition. Father has told me how the Turgui tribes, led by their famous chief, Hadjar, ambushed the explorers and massacred every one of them."

"But we are in larger force," Hardizan said; "and, besides, the Turguis have lost Hadjar. He is safe in a cell, under your father's lock and key, over there in the prison, and his capture has demoralized his people. They regard him as an inspired leader, and his mother, Djemma, as a priestess. She is reputed a sorceress, and, anyway, the guiding genius in her son's marauding operations, whether her powers are supernatural or not. But she is a fugitive—we don't know where; and a day after we start to go through the region of Hadjar's former sway he will be put board a ship for Algiers, to be tried for his crimes, and undoubtedly doomed to death."

"You led the party that captured Hadjar," said Marie, with a look of fond pride at the man she loved: "Tell me about it."

"The French authorities decided to organize an expedition to get possession of his person," Hardizan replied, "punish him for so many crimes and destroy his baneful influence over the tribes. A squad of cavalry under my command was appointed for this duty. We rode half way across Algeria. According to report, Hadjar, accompanied by his mother had about a hundred men, but though we had only half that number, I did not hesitate to attack him; the ratio of one to two is not enough to frighten our troops. We found him in the neighborhood of Ferkane. There was a brief fight. The Turguis had some killed and we had some wounded. Half of the Turguis got away, but their chief was not with them.

"At the moment when Hadjar tried to rejoin his companions I started after him as fast as my horse could go. Hadjar tried to unhorse me by a pistol shot—the ball would not carry. When his mount stumbled violently he missed his stirrups and fell. Before he had time to get up I threw myself on him; some soldiers ran up, and Hadjar was held in spite of his terrific efforts to free himself. It was no great feat—nothing to boast of. And I failed to capture his mother, the weird Djemma. That wonderful woman rallied her tribes of Bedouins, and would not have left her son in the hands of the French if our detachment had not been reinforced by soldiers summoned from the military posts of Touzur and Gafsa. Hadjar was taken, and well taken, but Djemma was left, to make more trouble."

"And perhaps to wreak vengeance on you," Marie said.

"Don't worry, sweetheart," Hardizan responded. "This expedition will be as safe for me as a pleasure tour, and I wish I might take you along for a honeymoon journey."

At 5 o'clock next morning the expedition left Gabes as the sun was rising above the horizon of Petite Syrte Bay and polishing the wide, sandy plains of the chott region. Engineer de Schaller and Captain Hardizan went to the head, escorted by some Spahis. After them came the convoy, which transported the provisions and camping apparatus. A company commanded by Lieutenant Villette formed the rear guard. Thus they set out, and Marie Lauri waved "Au revoir!" to Captain Hardizan.

CHAPTER II.

The Wicked Witch and Her Guileless Victim.

IN the doorway of an abandoned marabout hut, near the beach at Gabes, stood Djemma, mother of Hadjar, an Arab woman of the Touareg race. She was in her fiftieth year—tall, strong, erect and energetic. She had blue eyes, like all the women of her race, and from them gleamed an expression of ardor and pride. In spite of her white skin she looked yellow under the ochre that which covered her forehead and cheeks. She was dressed in some dark material, a broad mantle around her shoulders and a hood over her head, half hid a peculiar face—a weirdly fascinating face, yet ugly and cruel, with eyes that pierced always, and which now shone brightly.

Djemma remained motionless till her son Sobar joined her. He had watched the departure of Hardizan and the expedition, which he now described to her. She listened eagerly, hatefully, an when it was all told she cried out: "Ah, if my son were free—if Hadjar were not a prisoner—we would see to it that these Christian dogs never came back from the desert!"

"The ship that is to take Hadjar to Tunis," Sobar continued, "has doubled the cape and will moor off Gabes to-morrow morning. Then my brother will be borne away to his death."

"Hadjar, Hadjar—my son, my son," the woman murmured, shaking with rage and grief. "Shall we never see him any more? Shall he never again lead the Turguis in the holy war? No, no—Allah will not permit him to die."

As if this crisis had exhausted her she fell on her knees in a corner of the hut and remained there silent.

Sobar stood awhile in the doorway looking out toward the distant fortress, but frequently turning his uneasy eyes to Djemma. It was plain that from her must come whatever was to be said, whatever was to be done, to change the fate of the son and brother. Her mind was to originate, her will was to direct, and her unusual attitude of despair was discouraging.

"Mother," Sobar suddenly exclaimed, "some one comes—a French girl—a French girl, I should say."

The woman arose and went to the doorway. "It is Lieutenant Lauri's daughter—it is Marie Lauri. She has come to me several times to have her fortune told." Musingly she went on. "She is an easy creature to fool—her mind is open to me—her will is naught when mine controls it. She does not know I am Hadjar's mother. She thinks I am here to pick up a few miserable coins as a soothsayer. Ah, I tell her nothing that she does not already know—nothing that I do not learn from her. I put a spell upon her—a spell in which her thoughts are revealed to me. More than any other human being I have ever met does this girl submit unresistingly to the power with which Allah has endowed me."

Sobar listened in silence. When Djemma was in such a mood she was not his mother, but the priestess whom his tribe had held in awe. As with a quickly formed purpose she said: "Stay here, out of sight. I will go to her," and she passed out into the grove of palms that surrounded the marabout.

They made a striking contrast—Djemma and Marie—the grim woman and the gentle girl—one looking an evil witch and the other like a guileless child. But the Arab smiled a welcome as she said: "The Christian lady would again learn secrets from the wisdom of Mohammed. The man you love—the brave Captain Hardizan—he has gone away. But not before you betrothed yourself to him."

"How did you know?" Marie asked.

Djemma did not know, she had merely made a right guess, and she took immediate advantage of it. "It is given me to know things that are not told to me. I saw the departure of the troop, although I was here in my hut. I saw them start on their journey to Sahara."

"And you can see from the present into the future? Can you tell me of his return—of his safe return?"

A contortion of hate passed over the woman's face. How ardently she wished that her pretense of a prophetic gift were true; that she could foresee the fate of Hardizan and his comrades, and that it was to be disaster and death to these enemies of her people. But such occult power as she really possessed was no gift of prophecy, but of what science now understands to be hypnotic control. She did not know how or why she was able to throw persons into a trance—not all persons, but those who unconsciously submitted to her will, those who were naturally good mesmeric subjects. That was the endowment which she and her people believed had been given to her by Allah. She knew and used her abnormal control of many individuals, but was superstitiously ignorant of its nature.

"Sit there," she said.

Marie sat on the ground and Djemma squatted before her, gazed fixedly into her eyes, made peculiar passes over her brow, muttered words in Arabic and slowly put her into a hypnotic state, while assuring her that her lover would return safely and marry her happily. It was not to give information, however, but to get it, that Djemma was exerting her mesmeric influence, and when the girl had gone from a daze into unconsciousness the woman began to ask questions instead of giving answers.

"In what part of the prison is Hadjar's cell?" she demanded imperiously.

Marie replied in a low, monotonous, distraught voice: "The cell is at the northeast corner of the fortress, where the wall rises from the sea."

"How is it reached?"

"By a narrow court."

"Has the prisoner access to that court?"

"He has free access to that court."

"Could he make his escape from it?"

"The entrance is heavily barred and the walls are high."

"Is there no way out except through the barred door?"

"A small passage opens into a corner of the court."

"What kind of a passage?"

"A kind of tunnel."

"Where does it lead to?"

"It leads at an upward incline to an aperture in the wall about ten feet above the level of the sea."

"Could a prisoner get into this tunnel?"

"A metal gate shuts it at the courtyard end."

"Do you know if the gate is firm?"

"I have heard my father say that the damp air had rusted it—that it is in a weakened condition."

"Did he say if it might be forced?"

"He said it might be forced, but that the prisoner did not know it, and could not make his escape, even if he made his way through the dark passage to the opening, for there he would find himself looking down into swirling currents which no man could stem and which would carry him out to sea."

"What more can you tell me?"

"I can tell you nothing more."

With a few passes Djemma dispelled the trance, and Marie awoke without being aware that she had been under a spell. So far as she knew, not a word had been spoken after the woman's assurance that Captain Hardizan would come back unharmed.

"Can you tell me no more?" she asked.

"Not now," was the reply; "but come to me this evening—alone—when you are ready to go to bed. Then I may know more of your future."

Marie gave a silver piece to the woman and a singular thing happened. While the coin was passing from the girl's hand to that of the soothsayer, at the instant that it was in contact with both, Marie felt a slight, yet sharp, stinging shock, such as in her school days she had received when experimenting with an electric battery. At the same time a spark snapped from the bit of metal. Raising her eyes to the Arab's face she saw to her amazement that it emitted a faint glimmer or glow of blue-white light. The sight was awesome, but it lasted only an instant and then was gone, like one of those flashes of heat lightning that we sometimes see on a Summer day in a cloudless sky. Before she could be sure that she saw it at all it faded away and she was left to wonder if it had not been imaginary.

What was this Arab creature? A whim and freak of nature? Abnormal, surely; but whether supernatural the reader shall judge as the narrative proceeds. Marie left her, promising to return as bidden.

"Yes," Djemma growled, looking after the retreating figure. "I am sure I shall know more about your future, my lady, for it is in my hands."

After nightfall Sobar returned from hours of absence, doing what Djemma had ordered him to do, and said: "It is time."

"Yes," his mother responded, "it is time for Hadjar to be torn from the grip of the infidels. He must be out of the prison before sunrise. To-morrow would be too late."

"Everything is ready for the rescue," declared Sobar. "Before daylight we shall be far away toward the desert."

"And I with you," said she; "I will not leave my son." She paused before going on in an altered tone—quieter, with a hidden meaning—calmer, with an inscrutable purpose. "We shall take along another person from the fortress—the girl Marie Lauri."

"Is it well to burden ourselves with a captive?" Sobar interposed, "for the mere sake of a ransom, when Hadjar might be imperilled by it?"

Djemma turned on him almost fiercely. "Don't ask me why this is to be done. You need only to know that it is my will. Marie Lauri goes with us. She will come here to deliver herself to me, and I will lead her to the place where I am to join Hadjar."

CHAPTER III.

The Escape of the Brigand Chief and the Capture of Marie.

HADJAR, the Arab chief, was alone in his cell. One hour before the guard had left him, bolting the door between the small court and the cell. Hadjar was not yet forty—a tall man, with white skin, bronzed by the fiery African sun; thin, strong, accustomed to all bodily exertions. He had been secretly informed during the day by his brother, who was permitted to visit him for the ostensible purpose of bidding him adieu, of the plan arranged for his rescue. He awaited the moment of action with that extraordinary patience of the Arab fatalist, the race who always control themselves. At length he heard the agreed signal—the stroke of 11 o'clock on the fortress bell. Then he sprung the bolt with a tool which Sobar had left with him, passed into the court, wound his garments closely about his body and glided to the gate—at the opening of the dark tunnel.

"Marie Heard Him Speak the Name of Captain Hardizan, Her Lover. With Instant Strength and Courage Born of Hope, Marie Rose to Her Feet, Sprang Over the Crest of the Sand Dune and Ran Toward the Passing Troop of Soldiers."

The gate, as we know, was in a very bad condition. The bars yielded from their sockets under the tool which he applied. A few shakes cleared it and the passage was free. The Arab chief had only to climb about two meters to reach the outer orifice, and that was the most painful, as the tube rose steadily to the end. Hadjar reached it, nevertheless, and was not kept waiting. Almost at once these words reached his ear: "Here we are, Hadjar."

Sobar and a tribesman named Herrig were waiting below. Hadjar made one last effort and the upper part of his body emerged from the orifice ten feet above the water. Sobar stood up and held the boat against the wall. Herrig mounted his shoulders, and on the living ladder Hadjar descended. At that moment the firing of a gun off shore was heard.

"The ship that was to take me away has anchored in the harbor," said Hadjar.

Once seated in the boat Sobar and Herrig plied the oars vigorously, yet cautiously. It was best not to skirt the walls or the shore, but to put out into the gulf. Besides the ship there were, moreover, some small craft entering and leaving the port, and they must be avoided. Hadjar arose, and with his arms folded gazed at the prison with a long glare of hatred. Then, without uttering a word, he reseated himself in the stern of the boat. Half an hour later they landed on the beach. Drawing up the canoe, the Arab chief and his two partisans walked toward the marabout and reached it without mischance.

Djemma rushed to Hadjar and embraced him, saying only, "Come!" He followed her to the rear of the marabout, where three horses were ready, awaiting their masters' spurs. Hadjar mounted, and Sobar and Herrig after him. "Come!" Djemma had said on gaining sight of her son, and now she said, "Go!" stretching her hand toward the sombre regions of the desert. "Ride fast till you get to the well of Djerib. You will be safe there while you wait for me." As Hadjar hesitated she added to a tone of impatience: "Don't waste time. Sobar will tell you as you go along that we are to take a captive with us—Lieutenant Lauri's daughter. She is now in the marabout. So are two of our men. They will do what there is to do, and we will bring Marie Lauri in an hour to the Djerib will."

Again Hadjar was hesitant.

"Go," said D jemma, with a queen's imperious wave of the hand, and her two sons, with Harrig, rode away into the night.

Djemma watcher their disappear-

Djemma watched their disappearance and then went into the hut. Marie Lauri lay on the floor, unconscious from a drug—for, this time the Arab woman meant that her sleep should last till morning and be so profound in the meanwhile that nothing could awaken her. In a corner squatted two stalwart Arabs stolidly awaiting orders from their mistress.

"Put Her Into That Basket," Djemma Said.

"Put her into that basket," Djemma said, pointing to one of those wicker hampers which the Bedouins sometimes use instead of boxes and bags in the transportation of household goods and merchandise.

The man opened the cover of the basket and put the girl inside. Her figure had to be cramped to get it into the space, with her knees drawn up to her chin, but her young muscles were pliable and no difficulty was encountered in stowing her away.

Then they shut the cover and tied ropes around the basket.

"Follow me," said the woman.

The men thrust a pole through the ropes, placed the ends on their shoulders and followed Djemma out of the hut with the human burden swung between them.

When Marie awoke to consciousness she was being taken out of the basket. After a stifling confinement of an hour or more during which the two Arab men had walked rapidly with their burden behind the Arab woman) the fresh air of the night revived her. Yet it was dazedly that she looked from one to another of the four men who surrounded her, until her eyes fell on a fifth, whom she recognised as Hadjar, for she had seen him at the fortress.

"You are Hadjar, the Arab chief," she said; "and are you not a prisoner?" She glanced at the palm trees, at the stretch of sand beyond, at the moonlit sky, in manifest perplexity. "But we are not at the fortress. Where are we?"

No response was made to her question by Hadjar, but from the shadow of a palm Djemma stepped forth and said: "Hadjar has escaped from the prison. He is free."

"And I?" the girl exclaimed, in sudden apprehension. "Am I the prisoner now?"

"Yes. As until to-night Hadjar was a captive in your father's hands, so now you are a captive in his mother's hands. I am Djemma. Have you heard of me?"

Marie recalled what Captain Hardizan had told her of the strange woman who, more than Hadjar himself, was the dreaded leader of his tribe of robbers, assassins and Moslem haters of all Christians.

"I have heard of you," said Marie, "and of your wickedness. You have taken me to hold for a ransom. But have a care. My father is an officer in the French Army. A rescuing party will be sent after me. You will be punished severely if you do not set me free."

Djemma made no answer, but slowly approached Marie, with her black eyes fixed upon the blue ones, with her yellow hands making passes over the white face; and now again, as before at the marabout, the weak will succumbed to the strong one, and the girl stood passively in a hypnotic trance.

"They Made a Striking Contrast—Djemma and Marie—the Grim Woman and the Gentle Girl; One Looking Like an Evil Witch and the Other Like a Guileless Child."

"Set her on the ground," the woman ordered, and two of the men obeyed her.

Even to Hadjar this demonstration of his mother's strange power was startling, for he had never seen any one so quickly submissive to her. But his mind turned to more practical affairs. As his brother had done, so did he doubt the wisdom of incumbering the fugitive party with a captive, thus making it sure that they would be pursued relentlessly.

"Come with me," and Djemma led him apart from the others. "It is not in the hope of a ransom that I take this girl away. The object is far beyond money; it is so great an object that no fear of the Christians' vengeance can make me give it up; it is a matter of life and death to me."

"Of life and death to you?" Hadjar echoed wonderingly. His mother had ever been mysterious to him, as she was to all her people, and he was accustomed to what were believed to be her sorceries without questioning her processes. But now it seemed to him a mistake, a needless invitation of danger, to hazard his escape by the abduction of this French girl.

"It is a matter of life and death to me," Djemma repeated solemnly, "that I take her along to our altar at Rharsa—that I get there with her by the sixth day from this; and if you, by a rapid journey circle around Hardizan's troop and reach Rharsa before that ninth day of May, you will not only save your own life, but prolong mine—if the girl remains in my hands. No more—I will say no more. Will you obey me?"

"I will obey you."

"It is well. Seven maharas are at hand for our flight. Horses would not serve for our journey. I have provided maharas for the six of our party and a seventh for her."

The Saharan mahara is as different from the ordinary pack camel as our race horse from the road horse. Between sunrise and nightfall this beast can cover forty leagues.

An hour later, seated in the hollowed saddle of one of the seven camels, Marie became aware that she was being carried away from Gabes into the Sahara desert. Vague days and nights ensued. Sometimes she was keenly conscious of her plight; at others, and that was when Djemma dulled her senses hypnotically, she was as one in a dream. Every morning between 3 and 4 she awakened, still lame and stiff from the previous day. She opened her eyes to find overhead the starry night, in the comparative cool of which the journey was continued. Then, after a while and suddenly, the sun appeared nearly level with the horizon. There was no dawn. It was night, now it is day. The suffering it causes seals the girl's mouth and closes her eyes. She has now only the consciousness of being poised on the camel, which ambles along. A vague, painful confusion of life blinded by light, enveloped in torrid heat. What heat and what light!

The natives call the Sahara the Country of Fear on account of the visions which the sand mirage, and the fever due to heat, cause to appear to those who face them. Sometimes the traveller is a spectator, charmed and nervous, of scenes which really take place at great distances. The illusions of mirage came to Marie like visions. At the close of the third day the party approached a spring sheltered by a few palms. She looked and there, before her, between the spring and the palms, were women walking. Living creatures or desert apparitions? She could see clearly the jars which they carried on their heads or backs and their loose folds of blue drapery. The lower part of their skirts, the feet and the sand, were confused. They were clear for an instant, and then—as she cried out to them for help—they faded and disappeared.

CHAPTER IV.

Captain Hardizan Rescues His Captive Sweetheart.

THE French expedition, under the escort of Captain Hardizan and his soldiers, had pursued its way uneventfully into the desert. It was at the break of the fourth day. They had been in motion half the night and would soon halt to rest during the hours of heat. Hardizan, his lieutenant, Villette; his quartermaster, Nicol, and the engineer, de Shaller, were riding at the head of the column. Just as they reached a plateau and a valley of dunes was before them, Villette stretched out his hand, saying. "I think I see a troop moving away yonder."

"A troop—or a herd?" said Hardizan.

"It's hard to say at this distance," added de Schaller.

It was certain that, about three or four kilometres away, a cloud of dust was rolling over the surface of the desert. The commotion in the midst of it became more pronounced as it drew nearer. Two or three minutes later shots flashed in the cloud, and reports were heard, the smoke of which mingled with the dust.

"A caravan, defending itself from bandits," said Hardizan.

He gave the word of command, and away went his troops of cavalry for the scene of the combat. They soon saw that it was indeed a caravan whose journey had been interrupted. The band of plunderers would have quickly put the camel drivers to flight, massacred them if need be, got possession of the beasts and their loads, driven them to some far oasis; and doubtless this aggression, like so many others, would go unpunished, owing to the impossibility of finding the offenders—but for the succor that came so unexpectedly.

"Forward!" Hardizan shouted.

The pillagers did not wait for the shock. They fled before Hardizan when his men were well on the field, and disappeared behind the curtain of a wooded hill.

"And," asked Hardizan of the caravan's guide, "do you know to what tribe this band belonged?"

"They were Touraregs," was the answer, "and their leader was Hadjar himself."

"You are mistaken as to their leader, for Hadjar is by this time a condemned prisoner in Tunis."

"I am not mistaken."

The guide was not mistaken. Djemma and her two sons, with the three other tribesmen and the captive Marie Lauri, had travelled much more rapidly on their camels than the French expedition on horses, and, although taking a circuitous course to avoid discovery, had reached this point simultaneously with their enemies. Hadjar had espied the almost defenceless caravan and had not resisted the temptation to waylay and plunder it. That was quite in his line of trade, and, besides, he needed for his party the food which he might expect to find in the merchandise. He thought that Hardizan had already passed by, and so he did not expect the interference which that officer made with his exploit. Leaving Djemma and Marie concealed behind some sand dunes, he and his comrades mounted the fleetest five of the camels and set off to plunder the caravan. The unexpected result the reader already knows.

Djemma and Marie from their hiding place heard the gun shots, the woman crawling flat on the ground to a spot from which she could see what was occurring on the plain beyond. But the girl, exhausted in mind as well as body, gave small heed. The first thing that roused her from lethargy was the return of the five Arabs. They had gone out quietly and calmly; they came back precipitately and excitedly—for man of their naturally phlegmatic temperament. Their talk among themselves was always in Arabic, which she did not understand, but she saw that they were in desperate haste to conceal themselves. The camels were made to kneel, and their joints were tied to keep them from getting up, while their muzzles were bound to prevent them from making any noise. The dune which separated them from the open, where Hardizan's troop was going to pass, was but a low barrier, and the Arabs crouched behind it like sharpshooters in a trench. But Hadjar had no thought of firing on his enemies; he wanted to hide from them. Lying flat on his stomach, he peeped through the fissures on the crest, and in a low tone reported to his comrades what he saw. Marie heard him speak the name of Captain Hardizan. Instantly she was alert, and when again he spoke the name of her lover she comprehended that it was from the French troop that the Arabs were hiding.

With instant strength and courage born of hope Marie rose to her feet, sprang over the crest of the sand dune and ran toward the passing troop of soldiers. The Arabs were so amazed that for a moment they did nothing. Then Hadjar drew up his rifle and took aim at the fleeing figure. But Djemma held his hand from the trigger.

"She will tell them who we are if I don't silence her," Hadjar exclaimed.

"She must not die—not now—not here," said Djemma. "Her life is mine, and at the given time and place I shall take it."

Hadjar and the others gazed at her wonderingly, but he lowered his rifle obediently.

"We must get away quickly, if at all," he said. "These Christians, besides wanting to recapture me as an escaped prisoner, will try to take us for our abduction of that girl. Our camels can outrace their horses in a long chase if we gain ten minutes at the start over ground that we know and they don't. Mount—mount!"

His four followers hastily unbound the camels, and he stood ready to help his mother to the saddle. But Djemma stood looking toward the French column, the van of which was dashing forward to meet Marie, with Hardizan in the lead.

"Come, mother, come," said Hadjar.

She did not heed him. He and Sobar went to her.

"Why don't you come?"

"I shall not go with you," she responded, in that peculiar tone which they had learned to regard as final. "Make your escape—do not delay an instant—and leave me for Hardizan to find here. That will delay his pursuit of you a little."

"You shall not sacrifice yourself for us."

"It is no sacrifice. For my own purpose I must remain with Marie Lauri till I can take her away with me again—to our altar at Rahrsa. This is life and death, as I told you—death for her and life for me. Do as I bid you."

So they left her standing where she was and sped away on their camels. By the time that Marie and Hardizan had met in one direction the Arab men were well started in the other and were soon safely out of reach in a region whose hiding places they knew how to find.

Marie told Hardizan in a few confused words that she had been a prisoner to Hadjar, and where she had left him; but when the Frenchmen got to the spot they found no one there but the mysterious Arab woman grimly waiting to be captured.

AMERICA MAKES THIS FRENCHMAN VERY SAD.

M. Huret, After a Brief Visit, Has Gone Back to Paris and Published a Book Telling How Terribly Wrong We Are About Most Things.

"If they happen to be in a bad humor."

"You feel the shoes of the man behind you."

ANOTHER celebrated Frenchman—not quite so celebrated as Paul Bourget, author of "Outre Mer"—has visited America and hurried back to his beloved Paris and published a book about this country. He is M. Huret, one of the editors of Figaro, and he is not complimentary.

But he is terse and epigrammatic, and sometimes truthful, and consequently readable. For those reasons he is accorded the advantage of the wide publicity which this page of excerpts will give himself and his impressions of America and Americans.

HOME LIFE IN AMERICA.—So to speak, it is nil. Not only does all the world dine in restaurants, but the women themselves invite one another to lunch in the hotels. A hundred times I have seen parties of women lunching or dining in New York, in Boston, in Philadelphia, etc., etc. In this last city the wife of the biggest merchant, Mr. Wanamaker, lunched near me every morning at the hotel with a tableful of her friends.

People acknowledge that they live all the year in hotels or boarding houses. The advantage in this is that they do not have the cares of housekeeping and servants, and that they can easily change their habitation. They explain that business may call them East or South. The women have friends in Philadelphia, Boston or Florida. They can go to see them more easily than if they had a house to look after.

The real reason is, I think, the taste for movement and change, the inborn habit of always being on the lookout for something new.

APROPOS OF JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER.—I interview my waitress at a Santa Barbara hotel:

"There is a man who must be very generous," I remark.

She begins to laugh.

"He comes from Pasadena, where he left the hotel without giving a cent in tip."

"Would you change places with him?"

"No, no! Not even if he had hair on his head."

In conversation with one of Rockefeller's friends:

"They say he is miserly?"

"Miserly? He has given thirty millions to the Chicago University! He refuses to give tips because he does not think them just. He says what he must pay; that is all. He does not like to throw away money. He gives as much thought to the expenditure of twenty dollars as to a million."

"They say he is pitiless in business?"

"He is exact. What is due is due."

THE AMERICAN WOMAN.—You are for her a man like all the others, and she has known a thousand. She knows your ways, your looks do not deceive her nor your smiles, nor even your compliments, which she receives with pleasure, but which she discusses and weighs. She will even repeat them quite aloud before her friends, men and women. The men will appear to think them unimportant and even show a slight contempt for you. The women may remember that you said the same thing to them the day before and you may seem somewhat ridiculous. You soon become indifferent. You scarcely look at the women in the streets and the cars. You begin to be American.

It is the country of all the world where the flirt abounds. The flirt begins at sixteen, continues until marriage, without cessation, without rest. American women reason a great deal and reason very well. Their cold, calculating brains show them men as they are.

The American woman does not concern herself at all about her husband's business. "Does my husband concern himself with my kitchen?" she will ask. And the husband: "It is true that she is not concerned about my business affairs. Nevertheless I am annoyed by her domestic ones. When she is troubled about a butler or other servant she comes to me, and I have to settle it."

THE American always seems to be camping out. He seems always to be ready for some emergency.

All they want in the matter of food is that the table should be plentiful. A thousand times you will hear the exclamation "Delicious" over the most horrible dishes. The fact is that they put so much salt, pepper and sauce on everything that there is no taste left.

I have never seen the glass of water common on all trains rinsed by any one before drinking from it or after. Servants in the hotels pound on the door with their fists, and if they happen to be in a bad humor push it open with their feet, whistling while they await your orders, never hurrying and refusing absolutely ever to do anything that is not clearly their duty.

An American woman never knows in the morning if she can dine at home at night. For it may please her servant to take off her apron, put on her hat, demand her car and get out.

AFTER referring to the marvellous success of Alphonse and Gaston in the New York "AMERICAN." The American surprises you with his contempt for you. On the cars or railways, for instance, you feel the shoes of the man behind you be your back. Or your neighbor will stretch out his arm back of you in order to be more comfortable.

If at the theatre you have not remarked that in the vestibule a line is formed to take off your overcoats, instead of verbal advice you will receive a rude thrust from some one's elbow to inform you of it.

If you offer your seat in a car to a lady she will always accept it, but often without saying "Thank you" or even looking at you.

AMERICANS AS SEEN THROUGH THE EYES OF A HOMESICK FRENCHMAN.

The American considers self-control the most important virtue. He is prouder of it than of anything else. The wife, the husband, the mother, the child die; one must not cry; it is forbidden to show one's emotion.

I was presented to a policeman on Broadway who is always at the same post. I asked why I was presented. The answer was evasive: "One must stand well with the police."

And it is true that all Americans are deferential to them and seem proud to be recognized by them. When after six months I returned to New York the same policeman recognized me, smiled at me, took off his glove and shook my hand benevolently.

CONEY ISLAND.—Do not expect to find any lack of enthusiasm there. The Yankees leave that behind them in New York. They amuse themselves as they live—with all their might. A tumult of gayety greets you. Five hundred thousand human beings are shrieking, eating, drinking, laughing, climbing. Here the practical, commercial imagination of an American Barnum is in full evidence.

The amusements that the American crowds love are the most violent; those that frighten and fatigue and are full of danger. Men and women climb on on thick camels and elephants; their hats blow off, their hair tumbles in their eyes. They shoot the rapids, ride on swinging railways, screaming with fear and pleasure. Every one loses the loop.

LOS ANGELES.—The hotels are expensive, well organized, comfortable, except in the matter of food, which is atrocious as it is everywhere in America.

The first time in America that I have seen original architecture! Not only does it bear no resemblance to any that I have seen, but it is in most excellent taste, ingenious and varied as nature here herself, graceful, elegant, captivating.

"In the hotels the table manners of the men and women set at defiance all the ordinary standards of culture."

SAN FRANCISCO.—In the West the people are more affable, more approachable, simpler, livelier, than those in the North or South.

The Consul-General complains of the exorbitant prices of everything in San Francisco. Here are his figures:

Impossible to live less than six cents' worth of milk.

A servant asks at the least $35 a month. Some of them get even $40 and $50. They absolutely insist upon a carpet in their room: are unwilling to put up with matting.

Gas costs $2.50 for a thousand cubic feet.
Water tax is $5 a month.
Hair cut, two and a half francs.
Shave, one and a quarter francs.
Shining boots, half a franc.
A very ordinary furnished room, minimum, ten francs.
Living, as a whole, costs twice as much as in Chicago.

AT THE CAPITOL IN WASHINGTON.—The secretary of one of the best known and most eloquent senators in Washington is my guide. He has certainly received the best of educations. In pointing out the frescoes that decorate the walls of the reception room he says:

"There is not a hall in the world where there are more decorations nor such beautiful ones. Every bit of the walls and ceiling is painted. You will not see anything like it in the world."

The paintings were pitifully bad. I asked my guide if he had ever visited the halls of the Vatican. Quite indifferently, as though answering some unimportant question, he answered: "No." He paused before a bronze door: "This is the dearest door in the world. It weighs so many millions of kilogrammes."

I MET in the station at San Francisco a young and brilliant soldier of the California University, champion at golf. He was shown to me with pride. He was leaving for Algiers to take part in a match. It was his first trip to Europe.

"Will you stop in Egypt?" I asked. "Will you go to Greece?"

"Oh, no!"

His itinerary was made. He would be victorious and return. And he added, "The rest does not interest me."

He had every appearance of speaking the truth.

I have talked with a great many Americans of all ages, all positions, all kinds of intelligence. This is a sample of one conversation:

"You never rest?"

"We can't. If we rest others go on working and leave us behind."

"Well?"

"That cannot be. One must be respected. And if one amounts to nothing, one commands no respect."

GENTLEMEN chew tobacco or gum and spit everywhere. Both the men and women use their fingers instead of handkerchiefs. Not one person in a hundred covers his mouth when sneezing.

In hotels of the first rank the table manners of the men and women set at defiance all the ordinary standards of culture. The men throw their hats down, seat themselves next to you, without even giving you a glance, forget every minute that they are provided with forks, put their elbows on the table, violate good manners constantly without seeming to be even observed.

In New York I have even seen people at Sherry's wiping their fingers and mouths with the tablecloth.

THEY have in this country a mania for having their boots blacked two and even three times a day. I have seen workmen coming from their day's labor stop and give their six sous to have a shine.

My astonishment was great the first time I entered a store to hear the saleswoman say to me: "How do you do?" I thought for a minute that she was an acquaintance. But I soon understood that it was merely a sympathetic outburst.

In the great hotels I study the Introductions. A gentleman of high standing is presented to a lady. The gentleman nods and remains with his two hands in his pockets while making some conventionality polite remark.

In San Francisco a lady leaves the dining-room of a restaurant and in passing the boy who holds the door open gives him a little bow and says, "Good-by."

INDIVIDUALITY.—Brothers and sisters have friends absolutely distinct. It is even the custom for a young man to be received by a young girl at her own house without having been presented to her parents. If by chance they happen to be present the daughter introduces them; they disappear immediately, leaving the young people alone. The young people go out together to restaurants or among friends.

AMERICANS do not know how to eat. Any day one can see this: A servant brings an immense waiter on which are a dozen little dishes containing anchovies, an omelet, fish, lamb, green beans, salad, some preserves. The waiter leaves them. The guest ponders them all abundantly with salt and pepper, takes his fork and dips into each of the plates in turn. The Americans eat exactly what is put before them, and never during the eight months of my life in hotels have I heard a patron remark that a dish was bad or in any way reflect upon what was served him.

COMFORT.—In the hotels the chairs are rockers. Put any thing on them and it slides to the ground.

Go to a hotel conducted on the American plan. You arrive at five minutes past eight for dinner. Too late; they will not even give you a piece of bread.

IN PARIS a hairdresser would suffer if he wore eyeglasses. Everywhere here you are shaved by men in spectacles, who soap your face with their fingers and who clean their razors on bits of old newspaper.

I GAVE me pleasure the other day to hear Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt, heiress to some hundreds of millions, say, "I am hungry."

This is a country where it is not the fashion to loiter. The Baron Alphonse de Rothschild, who took a walk every afternoon on the boulevards, stopping before the shops to look in the windows, would have been very much looked down upon here by the business men.

Reflection heard in Chicago on the eighteenth story of a house while watching the columns of smoke rising everywhere: "What might not one do with all that smoke? What an amount of gas lost! What chemical forces lost by our ignorance! I believe that science will know how to make use of all that some day—before fifty years are past."

I am presented to Mr. Jerome. He is young, sharp, active as a business man. He receives me cordially. We begin to talk. He rings. A negro arrives, puts a box under his feet and shines his boots energetically all the time we talk. I am so distracted by the negro that I only remember this: "Reforms must go slowly—they must grow from the country itself."

REMARK.—America has only one thing that is little—the napkins. On the contrary, the spittoons are wells.

One meets scarcely any old men in America. I could count those I saw in eight months. And those who have reached sixty or seventy years do not show the beautiful serenity of the old men of our country. Their faces are too red, too nervous, almost as wide awake as those of the young men. One feels that they will not die lying down.

American business men laugh when they receive letters carefully written by hand from their European correspondents. They do not understand how any one can waste time so. I have seen those who haven't written a letter in ten years. Anything slow is really insupportable.

A phrase that Americans may write on their combatones. I copied it in San Francisco: "Time is the stuff that makes life."—Franklin.

Adele read in a tramway: "Passengers are requested not to put their feet on the seats."

Have you felt in Monte Carlo the strange sensation that money has lost its current value? One has exactly the same feeling in all the big American cities.

An outward sign of prosperity: In many of the cities the theatres have matinees every day and the houses are crowded.

"The maids in America absolutely refuse to clean boots."

THE American bears no hatred. He has enemies, he beats them or is beaten. But hatred, like flowers, is a luxury. Is this not the case in all busy populous countries? A multimillionaire, very powerful, said of an insignificant professor who wrote for the papers, and whom he had not been able to vanquish: "I flatter him because he is so wicked."

New York and Chicago are rival cities, and New Yorkers have transmitted to Parisians their prejudices, so that when they want to speak of a rude person, without manners or education, they say, "A pork merchant from Chicago." But in this city of Chicago I met with more charming people, more delightful attentions and more true politeness than in New York.

A funeral: Through one of the most frequented streets of Chicago, crossing trolleys and tramways, through crowds, a funeral cortege passed galloping, followed by a few carriages in mourning. One dies as one lives—on the gallop.

A current phrase: "Do you know that in Europe?" And that I am asked of the most ordinary things.

AT a ball the young men neglect the women, wander off into the smoking-rooms, scarcely speak to the dancers, and only dance for their health. When the supper hour comes they form themselves into groups at tables of their own, leaving the women to do the same. I am assured of this by a woman who complains that in the "smart set" it is the style to appear as indifferent as possible to the women.

The women do not dress for the men, who do not look at their clothes; they dress for each other. In America it would never occur to a man to compliment a woman, even his wife, on her toilet. He does not notice it.

I have never heard a man complain of being too busy; but women say constantly, "I haven't time."

In this country, where women are better treated than in any other part of the world, there are from eighteen to twenty thousand divorces a year.

In the streets I notice that the American women stops more often at the confectioner's than to look at the fashions.

"The rest does not interest me," said San Francisco's pride.

CREATOR OF FASHIONS FOR THE FASHIONABLE WOMEN OF AMERICA

Smart Evening Bodices

THE Smart Evening Bodice Comes in All Outlines Except the Blouse. It Is Round, Square or Pointed According to Individual Fancy

SIMPLICITY Marks the Style of the New Evening Bodice---Sleeves are Short and Very Small---New Finishes for the Waist.

THE smart evening bodice of this season is more simple than it has been for some years past. It also follows the lines of the figure much more closely. The blouse has practically disappeared from the horizon of fashion and does not come in any style of bodice, whether for evening or day wear. The bodice is either draped to a fitted lining or softly held in the belt.

Quite the most conspicuous note in the world of fashion, so far as evening bodices are concerned, is the increasing simplicity of evening gowns. The simpler these are the smarter they are.

It is an easy matter to make a gown that is fussy and frilly and full of trimming, but very difficult to achieve a successful gown that is severely simple and yet smart in its outlines. The demand is ever increasing for this style of a gown and modistes are finding the question of meeting it a difficult one. Pretty much all the "smart" women seem to want now is a dress which will follow the lines of her figure in charming simplicity, designed to show all its best points and conceal all its worst ones.

The sleeve of the evening bodice is short and small. It may be a puff or two or a bit of drapery of the dress material or lace, but in all cases it is small. Sometimes the sleeve is separate from and hangs below the shoulder band, but this is a matter of taste and is usually affected by women with extraordinarily beautiful shoulder lines.

When the skirt is trimmed with lace the bodice also is trimmed with it, and two ruffles of lace finish the sleeve.

Girdles for the waist are smaller than formerly. They sometimes form part of the bodice, and are often replaced by sashes and ribbon belts with chic little bows in the back. In the case of a belt it must be of a material that contrasts with the bodice, such as some form of soft silk.

It is made three inches wide in front and only an inch and a half in the back, where it is finished with a smart little bow. This bow consists, as a rule, of two upright ends and two longer ones hanging below the belt. In some cases a twist of ribbon is set above the hanging ends.

Some sashes are worn, but they are not half as popular as the new style of belt, just described, and they are of ribbon to suit the dress.

The Modified Straight Front.

I think that the bodice will continue to have a straight front, but a very modified straight front, and by no means the abnormal thing we formerly called by that name. The new straight front follows the easy, natural outline of the figure, and there is nothing of the extreme about it.

Sculptors tell us that the front of a woman's body should be straight about the waist line if she is properly formed, but the sculptor never illustrated a straight front form as we saw on the streets two seasons ago. When something new comes up there is always a tendency to fly to extremes before one really discovers the good points in a new style and develops those, throwing aside the bad ones.

Some evening bodices have the material tucked in princess effect, or rhinestones and with a deep cape bertha of shirred around the waist line net embroidered with rhinestones in a lines. This is a very graceful style of dress; one hard lattice effect. This drapery opens in front, to make effectively, and harder still to wear with the style showing the silver and jewelled straps. and poise necessary to make a princess gown truly a charming thing to behold.

An effective sequin trimming is shown in the bodice illustrated in figure A. It is black chiffon, draped and gathered over a fitted lining of cream colored chiffon. A drapery of chiffon scallops is gathered to the neck and covered with a design and fringe of large black sequins. Longer points of drapery decorate the front.

The decolletage is bordered with cream colored lace, thickly embroidered in rhinestones and opalescent sequins, and this is edged with shirred tulle. Upon the white border the black scallops of the bodice drapery are hung, headed by a band of overlapping black sequins.

The small sleeves illustrate the fad for little sleeves of a different material from the bodice, and are of shirred tulle, short and puffy, with full narrow quillings of tulle on each line of shirring and little ruffles on the edge. A shoulder strap is worn of lace and satin, incrusted with rhinestones.

Figure B shows a fetching bodice of ivory-tinted liberty satin, fastened in the back and made with a deep point in front. The material is gathered to the underarm seams and drawn across the front. Upon this draped front are set six rows of silver lace studded with rhinestones. These straps are put on at intervals apart and in graduated sizes, becoming shorter toward the bottom.

The decolletage is edged with lace, powdered with rhinestones and with a deep cape bertha of the same lace, also powdered with rhinestones in a lattice effect. This drapery opens in front, showing the silver and jewelled straps.

A lace puff forms the sleeve. It is trimmed with two ruffles of lace on the top and three on the bottom. A full, narrow frill of lace finishes the armhole.

This style of bodice would look very pretty made up in chiffon, gauze, thin crepe de chine or any other pretty Summer fabric. In the case of mulle and batiste the jewels had better be omitted from the lace or embroidery.

In Figure C is shown a very elaborate and smart bodice of white Maltese lace mingled with liberty satin. It has all the appearance of simplicity. The Maltese lace is draped over white chiffon and put on full over a fitted lining of white silk. The bottom of the bodice is finished with a wide band of liberty satin, shaped to the outline of the bodice and having the appearance of a girdle. The outline of the lace comes over it in irregular shapes and extends quite over it at the hip line.

On the underarm seam shaped pieces of satin show between the designs of the lace, and quite an effective design is set in the centre of the back by showing a piece of satin framed in lace.

Chiffon is drawn in close folds across the centre of the back in the top, where a scallop is formed in the lace decolletage.

The small sleeve is merely a draped puff of lace, and the whole effect is handsome as well as simple.

An Elaborate and Smart Bodice.

A dainty and Summery looking bodice is shown in figure D. The material is a close meshed light blue grenadine sprinkled over with wreaths and sprays of white embroidered roses, in the same sort of silk, but raised from the blue ground.

Like a pale flush of sunrise in a blue sky is the outline of pink tulle which runs around the decolletage and down each side the front in vest fashion. It is veiled with white lace, covered with filmy gold lace, carrying out quite a delicate cloud effect in blue, pink and sunlight.

The blue bodice material is gathered to the sides of the gold lace along the vest front, and over the line of gathers is sewed a shirring of mallne. This vest terminates with in a curved tab, passing over the belt and decorated with a large square buckle effect wrought in gold lace.

The belt is of white and blue, liberty taffeta. The upper row of ribbon is white and the lower one blue, carrying out the latest note in color combinations in belts, where a bodice is of two colors. It is finished in the back with a little twist of the ribbon and two long sash ends, a white and a blue.

The small sleeve begins with a shoulder piece of white lace, continuing in a band of gold lace, to which is gathered a ruffle of blue mallne above a full shirring of mallne. A little puff of mallne (or tulle) is finished with another shirring and a flounce of blue over one of white tulle. This flounce is quite narrow in front and pointed and longer in the back.

Almost any of the materials used for Summer evening gowns would make up well in this style, which is very generally becoming.

Another attractive style of evening bodice is shown in figure E. It is of very white chiffon satin, with jewelled bowknots as almost the sole decoration of a very simple bodice.

The chiffon satin is put on quite plain, and made with a pointed front and a simply rolled edge around the bottom. The back piece is drawn across the fitted lining and fastened to the underarm seam. The lining fastens down the middle of the back. The seam down the middle of the front is stitched and boned and trimmed with three large bowknots of rhinestones, upon a tulle foundation, put on in graduated sizes.

Bowknots of the same style frame the border of the decolletage on a band of shirred tulle, and the decolletage is then edged with a ruffle of cream colored lace. A shaped flounce of cream colored lace hangs over the bodice, being quite long in the back and caught up on each side in the front.

Filmy, Delicate Lace Used.

A shoulder strap is made of lace and rhinestones, decorated in the bowknot design, and a lace drapery falls over the upper arm by way of sleeve.

Across the front of the decolletage, above its edge, is drawn a piece of tulle from shoulder to shoulder, lying in close, soft folds that make a very becoming finish to the top of a bodice.

Tulle is used quite a good deal in corsage drapery and sleeves upon this season's bodices and it gives a touch of airy lightness that is suggestive both of youth and of the Summer. Lace of a filmy sort is used in this same fashion, quite often, but tulle is employed in connection with lace as well as with all other materials.

Generally speaking, all the lace now put on evening gowns is of a filmy, delicate quality and heavy laces are quite the exception to this rule. Diaphanous, filmy laces seem more appropriate, anyhow, to an evening gown and are, invariably, much more becoming than laces of a heavy pattern and character.

What Causes the Teeth to Decay.

DENTISTS are thrown into doubt again and all our business with our teeth about the cause of all our trouble and all sorts of tooth powders and washes have been devised to kill the germs with which the human mouth is known to swarm. These germs were blamed for all the damage because they are known to secrete a variety of acids which are known to have a destructive effect on bone and enamel of the teeth.

But now it is discovered that human saliva is capable of doing all the damage without the aid of the bacteria. The evidence brought out by recent experiments goes to show that there is present in the saliva a substance belonging to the group of enzymes, the group of which ptyalin, which changes the starch of the food to sugar, is a member.

Crooked Spines Made Straight

If you are suffering from any form of spinal trouble you can be relieved in your own home without pain or operation. The wonderful anatomical appliance has been invented by a man who cured himself of Spinal Curvature. Its results are marvelous. It is nature's own method. The scientific principle upon which it is effected. Noted specialists in prominent medical institutions and in private practice are endorsing The Sheldon Method. Relieves the pressure at the affected parts of the spine, and gradually restores strength and straightness. No space is taken out of the back, the curves between the vertebrae is made to expand, the contracted muscles are relaxed and the spine is straightened. There is RIGHT hope for you, no matter how long you have suffered. We have strong testimonials from every State in the Union. The appliances are being sent all over the world. Each one is made to order and is sent on approval. Parents and the patient. There is positively no inconvenience in wearing. We guarantee satisfaction, or refund your money at the end of thirty days' trial. Write today for new booklet containing full information and references.

What Happened When Cupid Wore a Mask.

By SIBYL REID.

"AND I really think," said Mrs. Merriman, "it was more than one of my ordinary inspirations."

"Really?" said I.

"Yes. It was genius. I'll tell you about it.

"Laura was staying here. She wasn't by way of being actually engaged, you know. One of those unsatisfactory sort of half-and-half things. He's a nice boy—quite a nice boy; but he had a gay little way, like the Tomtit, you know.

"Laura was here some time. They wrote to each other; more often than not, as Tom would say. Then for a few days she looked 'mopy,' and was, for her, quite cross. She came to me, and by degrees began a long rigmarole. He was this, and he was that; he was writing horrid short letters; of course she didn't care—it wasn't that; only he wasn't to think he could behave as he chose. He was staying in a house full of people; he had himself said there were some nice girls there, and—this was the spex of the whole matter—he was going next week to another house, to which her twin sister had been asked, and not she.

"The thing is,' said I, 'are you—I mean are you sure of her—er—constancy? Isn't that the word?'

"'I don't know what the word is,' she said. 'I'm sure of nothing except that I don't care.'

"I ignored this and went on: 'If you are sure, there is no more to be said, is there? If you are not——'

"'Well,' said Laura, 'if not—what?'

"'Your twin sister's very pretty, isn't she?'

"'I don't know,' snappily. 'We—we're supposed to be exactly alike. Only she wears a fringe, and has darker eyebrows. Yes. She is pretty.'

"Then came a sudden burst of confidence. "'Dear Mrs. Merriam, I'm afraid he'll think she's prettier than I am.'

"'But surely he has seen her before?'

"'No—that's just it. He hasn't. She's been abroad a great deal. I never met him till this Summer, you know. I can't think,' piteously, 'why the Chamberlayns asked her and not me! It isn't as if they knew either of us well. It's only civility, because papa did something for Mr. Chamberlayne—I forget what; and so they said, "Do let your daughter come to us;" and, seeing Norah about, hit upon her. I don't believe Norah cares about it. But, George Marten is coming to the Rectory that week, and she'——

"'Stop!' I said authoritatively (I really couldn't bear any more confidences—especially second-hand ones!) 'Stop! I have a magnificent idea. Come up to my room, and let me cut you a fringe.'

"'What on earth do you mean?' said Laura blankly.

"'What I say. Come up at once.' She came, and I cut it.

"'It is a great improvement,' she said, as she twisted up her hair. 'I shall write and tell him.'

"'Do you want,' I said. 'You little blind idiot! Don't you understand? Now, tell me—how much would it take to keep Norah away from the Chamberlaynes?'

"'Laura's jaw dropped.

"'To keep away? Oh, I couldn't do that! It's—it's not what they call "playing the game." Besides, it would upset the Chamberlaynes's plans.'

"'How if you went instead of her?'

"'Laura's head went up.

"'Thank you! I have more pride than to force myself——' she suddenly stopped. She had caught sight of herself in the glass. She laughed, picked up a hand-glass, and turned slowly around.

"'Could she be bribed with a hat?' I said, with a businesslike air; 'a Paris hat?'

"'I—I think a London one would do. You see, George Marten will be at the Rectory—She took a burnt match and began darkening her eyebrows.

"I struck while the iron was hot. 'Write at once to Norah, and settle everything,' I said briskly. 'Go home a day or two earlier—I shall be sorry to lose you, dear; but this is important); borrow a respectable amount of Norah's things, and appear at the Chamberlaynes as Miss N. Stafford.'

"'And then?' she said.

"'And then you must remain at the Chamberlaynes as Miss H. Stafford.'

"'I wonder if I can do it?' she said, with a nervous laugh. 'He knows we're very much alike—but still——'

"'You will then know for certain,' I said callously.

"She shed a few tears at this juncture.

"'Then don't do it,' I said. 'It was only a suggestion.'

"'Oh, I must,' she answered. 'You see, you've cut my fringe.'"

Mrs. Merriman took a sheaf of letters from the bureau.

"'That is quite wrong,' she said to me. "But I don't think Laura will mind—now. Besides, it is essential to the story."

"It Is All Over."

MY DEAREST MRS. MERRIMAN!

Norah is an angel. It is all quite easy. Mamma is away and papa is in town all day; besides, he never knows which of us is doing what.

Norah went dreem of taking a hat! George Marten is coming down to-morrow. I am getting so nervous!

Your ever affectionate LAURA.

(Two days later.)

MY DEAREST MRS. MERRIMAN!

I have come and so has he. I nearly fainted. He doesn't guess. He talked to me all the evening about me—Laura! Twas magnificent. No time for more. He never looks at the other girls.

Yours devotedly, LAURA.

(Three days later.)

MY DEAR MRS. MERRIMAN!

You asked me to write every now and then and tell you how I was getting on. I am quite well, and hope you and Mr. Merriman are. The weather is very bad, and we cannot go out much. I leave on Saturday.

Yours very affectionately, LAURA STAFFORD.

P. S.—He is hateful. He is making love to me—real love—like he used to, only different, because now I am Norah—at least he thinks so. Why did you send me to this hole?

ST.

(Next day.)

DEAR MRS. MERRIMAN!

You will be surprised to learn that I leave here to-morrow morning. I would have left to-night, only there is not a train.

It is all over. He has been saying such things. To think he ever could look at any one in exactly the same way he used to look at me!

I wish I was dead.

I told him to-day I was going to tell Norah. "Oh, no, you won't!" I hate him.

I wonder I kept up, but I did.

How could I ever have liked him the least little bit?

I am feeling very ill.

Yours, L. STAFFORD.

(Next morning.)

MY DEAREST DARLING MRS. MERRIMAN! Will you believe it? It is all right. He he said hardly bear to keep it up, only I was so sweet. I tell him he was most cruel and unkind. He says it was a very wicked idea, and whoever put it into my head ought to be cut! But as it all turned out well he went make a fuss. I feel I have been a double-faced hypocrite, and I am so happy. He says he cares for no one else in the whole wide world, and he doesn't like fringes, so he can't like Norah when he sees her. Dear Norah! Just fancy, she is going to marry George Marten—isn't it odd?

Your most devoted and grateful LAURA.

Mrs. Merriman put the letters away and laughed.

"That was genius," said she.

"No it wasn't," said I.

"He talked to me all the evening about ME."

"I'm afraid he'll think she's prettier than I am."

knew all along. How could he? He said he knew when he heard me sneeze, as I did when I arrived at that horrid, draughty station—I mean, dear draughty station! He knows my sneeze is a million. He says

Things That Help to Make Well Dressed Men.

WHILE there is more individuality practised by men in the matter of clothes than for many years past, there are certain details that are observed by all well dressed men. For instance, double-breasted waistcoats have been banished. All are single-breasted, cut high and have no collars. For the hot weather the smartest one is made of plain holland, "swing colored."

Straw hats are worn both in town and in the country, but the Panama this year has lost much of its popularity of the last two or three seasons. White felt hats of the Alpine and wideawake shapes are in good taste. The brown bowler is smart for town wear when the frock coat is laid aside.

The fad for brown came in very suddenly. The brown jacket, military shape with high collar, trousers to match, and a white helmet, with brown shoes and a brown bowler hat make a combination extremely effective, and is being encountered on the streets and in the parks with growing frequency. It is an outgrowth of the brown jacket craze which threatened to crowd out everything except full dress.

In warm weather the glove proposition bothers the minds of busy men who would like to be correct in their dress.

In the Summer it is not usual to wear gloves with a jacket suit if the weather is very warm; but a pair of gloves is carried in one hand by most men. With a frock coat, even in the height of Summer, at least one glove is worn, and when only one, it is the left hand that is gloved. The reason of this is that it is always better to shake hands with the bare hand; but it is not correct to remove a glove for the specific purpose of so doing, except in one instance.

If you attend a levee of the Prince of Wales, or a stag reception by the King, the right glove must be removed in any case, because although, as a rule, the royal hand will acknowledge your bow with a similar (but somewhat slighter) inclination, he may elect to draw you into conversation, and in that case will shake hands with you. You may shake hands out of doors with any one and keep the glove on (and it is a bad break to apologize for doing so); but never with royalty. At a levee, of course, one is generally indoors, and on entering any house the glove is dancing and on occasions of great ceremonial removed, though the hat and cane must be carried into the reception room (an exception is always left downstairs in the hall), and when tea is served the other glove is taken off also, and both are put in a pocket.

A night white gloves are only worn for lodge, ball, and dinner dress does not include gloves. Very few men wear gloves at the theatre. White gloves are always worn at the installation ceremony of a Masonic

Why Men Get Small Pay

A man receives a small salary because he lacks training for a special line of work; because he depends for his occupation upon the want columns of the daily newspapers, or upon some other equally haphazard method, instead of striving for a position of promise and profit.

The International Correspondence Schools were created 15 years ago, and to-day have an equipment valued at $5,000,000 the sole purpose of which is to qualify handicapped men for the better positions of life. The I. C. S. makes no distinction between clerk and mechanic—whether a man's income is small, his work confining, or his education limited. If he can read and write, and has the ambition to succeed, the I. C. S. can qualify him by mail, in his spare time, for a higher salary in his present work or in a new occupation.

Thousands have succeeded. You are no different from others. Your income is no smaller, you are no older—no younger—no further away—no more helpless. You, too, can succeed!

It costs nothing—to ask HOW. Look over the list of positions given below, mark the one that appeals to you, then

What to Do at a Paper Wedding.

By LINDA HULL LARNED, Author of "Hostess of To-day."

THE anniversaries of the first decade of married life bring concerned with such ordinary things as paper, cotton, leather, wood, wool and tin are joyful occasions to show hospitality without imposing a financial burden upon one's friends.

This is fortunate, as one's friends during these years of beginning are often quite as impecunious as one's self. Later, when every one has grown richer, it is easier to meet the obligations of the silver and gold celebrations.

For this reason it then becomes a question of good taste whether or not these anniversaries should be publicly celebrated. Of course, intimate friends who receive invitations to these later day wedding anniversaries take pleasure in remembering the happy pair by some gift of intrinsic value, but from the mere acquaintance the practice of this custom is more honored in the breach than in the observance.

It seems a pity from the really material and practical point of view that the more expensive anniversaries do not come first. What a help it would be to the poor young couple, and the two adjectives usually go together, to have each anniversary bring a bit of china or silver, in the beginning when so much needed, rather than later in life when they are usually superfluous. It is only another proof of the old adage "Them that has, gits."

Hood, the poet, in "Miss Kilmansegg's Honeymoon," speaks of the penny wedding in which the guests contributed toward the expenses of the entertainment, and frequently toward the household outfit of the wedded pair.

But perhaps the numerous "showers" that the brides of to-day is deluged with take the place of the penny wedding. These showers which kind friends bring down upon the bride-to-be during the antenuptial days help greatly toward diminishing the expenses of beginnings.

There are kitchen showers, which means kitchen utensils, and linen and tea cups and what not, anything an ingenious yet practical minded hostess may conceive of, but it is said that these showers are not popular among the smartest circles. That is the reason they have not been introduced into this section.

But, really, would it not be fun to celebrate the penny wedding, just for a novelty? It would be particularly appropriate for those who have had no real wedding; those who have slipped off quietly and been married without fuss and feathers or favors.

Those who have not been called upon to give wedding presents ought not to object to thus contributing toward the setting out and setting up of some one else in life. To many the invitation to a wedding is more or less a form of graft, but the penny wedding would not be so serious an affair.

It should come midway between the actual day and the first anniversary, and people should be expected to send so many pennies' worth of things rather than dollars.

The real beginning, however, the celebration at the end of the first year, is the paper wedding, although a few authorities claim the first one to be cotton. All of these early celebrations are usually absurdities—occasions for practical jokes and silly merrymaking.

Besides being a jolly affair, the paper wedding can easily be a very pretty one, for our shops are showing wonderfully artistic designs in crepe paper, as well as many new articles made of paper. An entire gown of white crepe paper, with designs of flowers of one color, or a harmony of colors, would make a woman look as beautiful as she would in silk or satin.

Another idea is to buy one of the paper pattern dresses seen in the pattern shop windows.

Handkerchiefs should be garbed to match, although your particular "her" may not submit to being papered further than coat and waistcoat. A pair of white duck trousers should be the foundation upon which to build, and, at least, a gaudy paper necktie should be in evidence if he bolts at the other suggestions.

But we are getting ahead too fast. We must go back to the invitations. They, of course, will be written on paper. It scarcely seems consistent to issue engraved invitations to these silly functions. They should be informal from beginning to end, and the Goddess of Glee should preside over all. But instead of using plain note paper, the bid may be printed on paper napkins and enclosed in fancy valentine envelopes.

Guests may send anything that is made of paper. From a housemaid's pail to a pack of cards or a book. The donor's visiting cards are not only sent with these gifts, but are exhibited, which does not always seem to be the case when the presents are of silver or gold.

The entire house should be decorated with garlands of paper leaves and paper flowers everywhere. These leaves may be bought in compact bunches all on cords, which pull out into yards of garlands. The flowers may be made at home by nimble fingers, if those at the shops are too expensive.

In the dining room the bare table may be covered with lace paper doilies, or a set of tablecloth and napkins, which come by the paper, may be used. Some of these are really beautiful, and there are finger bowl doilies to match. The entire cost of the best kind costs less than a dollar.

There should be paper dishes for the bonbons, and paper cases used for the food whenever possible. The ices and ice cream should be served in paper flowers or boxes, and huge paper flowers should adorn the centre of the table. These flowers, if the assemblage be a small one, should contain suitable souvenirs.

At a luncheon given by a "paper bride" not long ago the table, as well as her costume, represented paper butterflies in the colors of yellow and brown. She wore a gown of white paper with butterflies on her shoulders and in her hair. The flowers in the centre of the table were hovered over by butterflies, and they were also strung on fine wire from chandelier to edge of table. Place cards were butterflies, and a scenic at each plate was in a paper cocoon.

At another paper wedding celebration the Japanese idea prevailed. The hostess appeared in paper kimono while her husband wore a Mikado coat fashioned in paper. Cherry blossoms and wisteria decorated the table, hung from the chandeliers, and were pressed into service all through the rooms as garniture.

Some of the presents were extremely useful as well as ornamental. A box covered with wall paper in yellow rose design contained snugly fitting smaller boxes, thereby making compartments for all sorts of dainty belongings. There were a soft, pillow completely encased in lace with an edge of paper twisted into a rope, a paper pincushion, and a subscription for a popular magazine and the latest novel in a flowered paper cover were also among the acceptables.

When decorating for the paper wedding one should not forget to shade every gas and electric light with paper, all of one color. Red, pink, rose, and even yellow, are becoming, but one design in roses or tulips the most effective.

At the end of the feast a tray full of mottoes might be passed, each guest donning the cap enclosed. If this function is to be a small one, with but few bidden, then it would add to the fun to have each guest come in a paper costume in character. The Japanese girl, the Yellow Kid and the Circus Clown are suitable paper characters.

As paper is pretty as well as cheap it only requires a little ingenuity to arrange a paper wedding celebration that would be a delightfully charming and yet unique affair.

The Goddess of Glee, however, must be put upon her pedestal, for there should be nothing stiff and formal about a paper wedding. LINDA HULL LARNED.

Five Horses as Beauty Prizes for the Five Prettiest Summer Resort Girls.

FIVE saddle horses, all saddled and bridled, will be presented by this newspaper to the five prettiest girls at the Summer resorts.

This interesting prize competition is open to all. Many widowers and young women have already sent in their own pictures, and still more photographs of young Americans whose beauties have been received at this office through the hands of gallant admirers and adoring friends.

Each photograph should have the full name and address and be mailed to SADDLE HORSE PRIZE, care of this newspaper.

The horses will be the best obtainable, thoroughly broken to the saddle, gentle and kind, quite sound in wind and limb and perfectly suited for a lady.

The saddles to be presented with the horses to the fortunate winners are the very highest grade "Cross" Company side saddles—the handsomest product of the celebrated Mark Cross Company, headquarters of the fashionable set in both England and America for harness, saddlery and ultra-smart travelling and small leather goods.

They are of the very finest English pigskin, have the fashionable flat seat favored by the West End horsewomen of London and seen on all the bridle paths around New York, and are sanctioned by the hallmark of society. In the way of saddles nothing finer can be produced in the world.

Duplicates of them may be seen at the American establishments of the Mark Cross Company, at No. 250 Fifth avenue and No. 253 Broadway, in New York, and No. 20 Summer street, Boston. Photographs of them also may be seen at Ross Brothers' store in Kearney street, San Francisco, and at W. K. Cowan & Co.'s, on Michigan boulevard, in Chicago, who are the Western agents of the company.

Appropriate Cross bridles to go with these saddles are part of the outfit, manufactured for this contest by the Cross Company's workshops in England. They contribute every element of smartness that can be put into a bridle.

Since the announcement of the prize offer was made many contestants have entered the competition.

All you have to do is to send in your own photograph, or the photograph of the loveliest young woman you know. Mail the picture, with full name and street address, to

Mystery of Stolen Millions Hidden in a Grave

Officers of Trust Companies and Banks Shattered by Forgeries of "Good Fellow," Benjamin H. Gaskill, Supposed to Be Dead and Buried in Boston, Believe Him to Be Alive and Rich in a Foreign Retreat.

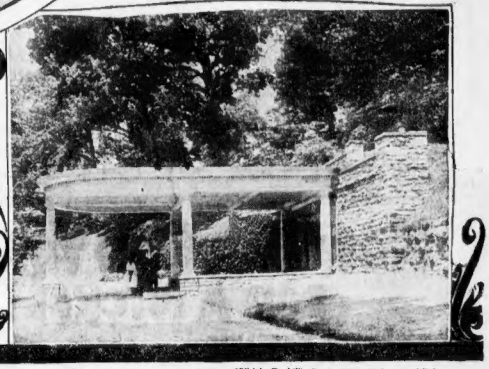
Facsimile of a Stock Certificate "Raised" by Gaskill.



Philadelphia Cemetery Vault from Which Gaskill's Body Was Taken at Night.

Mrs. Benjamin H. Gaskill.

Gaskill Family Plot.

UNSUSPECTED of crime, did the millionaire king of modern forgers and wrecker of banks and trust companies really die?

Does the body of Benjamin H. Gaskill, of Philadelphia, actually lie in a grave in Forest Hills Cemetery, Boston? Or is he alive and enjoying the fruits of his years of depredations upon the property of others, in some foreign retreat carefully prepared against threatened exposure?

Neither history nor fiction has presented a criminal career so successful while unsuspected, or an enigma for the present so baffling.

Whether Mrs. Georgiana Ella Gaskill, his wife, taking with her many thousands of dollars in plate and household goods that belong to Gaskill's creditors, has gone to his hiding place to rejoin him, is another problem.

Problem No. 1 is now being considered by private detectives, by the domestic and foreign police, and by insurance companies in which Gaskill held policies.

Problem No. 2 is in the hands of the administrators of the Gaskill estate and counsel for the creditors.

Both problems will probably be solved at the same time. From its grave in the Boston cemetery the coffin that is supposed to contain the body of Gaskill may be taken any day and be opened by the officers of the law.

When Gaskill followed his $50,000 racers about America, bought whole suites of staterooms for his voyages abroad, lured, Crossus-like, upon Europe, scattering gold wherever he touched, set an almost unbreakable record for extravagance and consumed enough wine to make even Omar regret his Mahabiyat, he was no mystery to his fellow brokers of the Philadelphia Stock Exchange, which he used as a base for his gigantic frauds and as a mask for his robbery of financial corporations.

To them he was simply "Ben" Gaskill, owner of an apparently inexhaustible collection of gilt-edged securities, upon which he, from time to time, secured temporary loans—a sport, a spender and a "good fellow."

Wrecked by His Frauds.

Not until one month after his death had been announced—when there came the revelations of his stupendous operations; when, steadily mounting, the total of his forgeries from raised stock certificates reached a million dollars; when the City Trust Company of Philadelphia, with its hundreds of depositors, fell, wrecked by his frauds; when other banks there, in New York and scattered about the country were shaking—and until then did the shrewd men of finance realize that Gaskill had been other than he had seemed and was in reality one of the great criminals of the age.

Of the old Mount Holly and Philadelphia Quaker family, one of the best and oldest in the two States, Gaskill received his education at Princeton University. Early in life he met and married a fair Nova Scotian, a belle of Halifax. She also was of good family. Before he had reached twenty he had broken with his family. They were staid, conservative folk. Gaskill's yearnings for the flesh-pots, for wealth and for luxury were frowned upon, and soon he cut all the home ties.

After he married, the couple moved back to Philadelphia; Gaskill bought seat in the Philadelphia and New York Stock Exchanges; they opened up a mansion on South Twenty-third street and began to entertain lavishly.

Swindles Went on for Twenty Years.

Nothing quite like the interior of the Gaskill house had ever been seen in Philadelphia. Priceless carpets and rugs that were the silken soul of the East covered the floors. Statuary and things of art from every country where art has a throne filled the rooms. Their gallery of paintings brought artists and connoisseurs from many lands to see it. Their dinner service was of gold and silver. Everything spoke of unlimited wealth and extravagance.

Followed then throughout twenty years Gaskill's bizarre career: followed his trips to Europe, where he scattered gold like chaff; followed the countless acts, whims and entertainments that bore all the marks of inexhaustible gold. His freaks, his expenditures caused comment, but only that which could follow the doings of any man who was doing remarkable things with his own money. His credit was like a rock; his securities were gilt-edged.

And all these years the money that he was spending was only a part of the wealth that came to him through his forgeries.

Throughout the whole country Gaskill's paper went.

One million dollars has been accounted for—two millions and perhaps a half; a sum twice as great, those now settling his estate say the stolen tide will rise. Shaker of trust companies, one has already fallen and others are tottering under his hand.

For twice two decades the forgeries went on, and hundreds of thousands of dollars poured into Gaskill's pockets.

Then came the time that the great forger saw the end approaching, when he realized that the mountain of fraud he had been piling up was collapsing.

It was a little over a year ago that he took a hurried trip to Europe—for his health it was reported then; but now it is suspected the trip was to prepare a place of retreat, that when the landslide came he would not be buried beneath it.

Bearing with him more laurels for reckless spending, Gaskill negotiated a loan—and how great this last loan upon the forged certificates was none will probably ever know.

Then he conveniently died.

At least it was announced in the last week of May that he had died. Cirrhosis of the liver was the name given to what it was said had killed him. It was brought out with great distinctness that it was a disease to which his habits of life made him peculiarly susceptible; it was revealed that he had been ill for two years. That hurried trip for health was confirmatory evidence.

When the day for the funeral came around all the big men of finance, the leaders of the professions and men of business in Philadelphia who had known Gaskill, went to the old mansion on Twenty-first street to bid his body farewell.

Very dark was the great room wherein the coffin lay. Down upon it looked the paintings, the costly statuary, the priceless objects of art that had belonged to the dead man.

The room was very dark. Many complained that they could hardly see the face in the coffin. Others remarked how little it looked like Gaskill. Others said that it was Gaskill as he had looked ten years before. All agreed that the room was very dark.

For a very short time was the body on view in the darkened room. Then it was taken out to the receiving vault in West Laurel Hill Cemetery, Philadelphia.

Wife Not at the Funeral.

Few followed the coffin so far; those who did were relatives and the very closest of friends, perhaps three or four. Mrs. Gaskill did not go at all. In fact, she had not been seen the whole time the funeral was in progress. Shock had made her ill, it was said, and she could not bear either the services or the parting at the grave.

Then the men of Philadelphia and the goodly scattering of prominent people from New York who had come over began to forget about Ben Gaskill. And then slowly, faintly, like mists before a tempest, vague rumors began to float through the Street.

What was the mystery in Ben Gaskill's death? Somebody said he wasn't dead at all. Nonsense. What would be the use of such a hoax? Wasn't Ben Gaskill gilt-edged? Wasn't John R. Worden, son of Joseph Leeds Worden, who made millions out of Standard Oil, one of his best friends?

They were the shadows of the impending revelations.

Came then a month later almost to the day, the exposure of Gaskill's colossal villainies.

Like wildfire the news ran through the city. Every trust company and bank put experts at work upon their securities to see if any of Gaskill's raised certificates were in their vaults. Those who had loaned him money quaked. In the Stock Exchange all was confusion and anxiety.

In the wilds of all the incipient financial panic and chaos that ruled on that day there came one still, quiet voice. Late that afternoon A. L. Smith, superintendent of the cemetery, was called up by one of those near to Gaskill, who, he will not say beyond that it was one who had authority to request, at was requested.

"The body of Mr. Gaskill will be taken away to-night," said this person over the 'phone. "Please see that it is ready."

"Will we take care of sending it where you want it to go?" asked Smith.

"Just you have the body ready," was the answer. "That will be taken care of."

That same afternoon the Pennsylvania Railroad was informed of the prospective shipment of a body.

It was a stormy night, but between 8 and 9 o'clock a wagon drove up to the cemetery. The coffin had been taken from the receiving vault and awaited them. The men in the vehicle satisfied the cemetery superintendent that they were empowered to take the body. It was given them and they drove away.

Now, as to the route taken by the coffin thereafter there is more mystery. Every effort was made by the family of Gaskill to keep the removal of the body secret. It was not until late next day that the fact that it had been hurried from the Laurel Hill vault leaked out.

Then Mrs. Gaskill, through a representative, made a statement.

"Mr. Gaskill's last wish had been to be buried in Boston."

"Why did she take this curious time and such secret methods to remove the body?"

"There was no mystery. Mrs. Gaskill simply wished to fulfil her husband's wish."

The body, it was stated, had been taken to an undertaker's the same night it was carried from the vault and had been placed on an early morning train and sent to Boston.

Say He Died In Agony.

Gaskill's confidential business man told in detail and with scrupulous attention to small happenings how he had seen Gaskill die.

"His agony was terrible," he said. "Then when he died his body turned ghastly then it went yellow, and from that to a dirty olive green. It's all a nuisance, these stories."

While the storm of suspicion and speculations was raging in Philadelphia, the coffin reached Boston.

It was accompanied by only one man, an old friend of both Gaskill and his wife. From the depot it was carried quickly to the Forest Hills Cemetery, placed in a receiving vault there, and as quickly as possible lowered into a grave in a lot owned by George Ella Gaskill, the brother of the forger.

There were no funeral services, no mourners, no one to watch over the burial except the solitary messenger who had accompanied the coffin north. There was much comment because the undertaker of the Board of Health of Boston did not view the remains.

Undertaker J. S. Waterman, who handled the coffin at Boston, says he does not know whether Gaskill's body was in it or whether it was filled with stones.

This is substance in what they still repeat.

Superintendent Smith, of the Cemetery, does not know whether it is Gaskill's body within the coffin, whether Gaskill's body was ever in it.

"How do I know?" he says. "If everything's regular, that's all the length I can go. Everything was regular in this case.

"Yes, there was something odd about carting the body away so hastily and unexpectedly that night, but that's their business, not mine."

"Would it not be an easy matter for a person to counterfeit death, be placed in this vault, get out of the coffin and in one's place put a dummy?" he was asked.

"Well, anything's possible," said the superintendent.

During all this time, while she was being sought to put an end to the mystery, Mrs. Gaskill remained in seclusion in her mansion at No. 1617 South Twenty-first street. It was given out that she had gone to live with friends, but subsequent developments have shown that she remained in the house all the time.

Permission to do this was granted by the administrators, both of whom knew and both of whom felt strongly for the slender, great-eyed woman. So as long as she could, they decided she should live among the things of beauty that she had known all her life.

Never apparently seeing any one, never going out, Mrs. Gaskill dwelt alone.

Days rolled by and the Gaskill treasures were to be sold at auction for the benefit of the creditors and dupes of the great forger.

Thinks She Fled to Europe.

From the door of the great house the red flag waved and hundreds pushed and fought to get in to get a chance to bid.

Where were the beautiful paintings, where the treasures of furniture, where the beautiful rugs and carpets, the things of art? There were marks on the wall showing where paintings had hung, there was some beautiful things left. But of what was known to have been there, the riches of silver and gold, the treasures, hardly one remained.

Administrator Eyre claims to be in possession of information that Mrs. Gaskill has fled to Europe. The machinery of the law has been put in operation and she is now being sought. If she is caught an effort will be made to bring her back and to have restitution made.

In a curious diary, found among his papers and now discovered, there appeared the following entry, written on the back of a letter:

"Without entitled I was rather dull, not capable of reasoning, was able to put things and things that were so easy to me which this was to me. It seemed that a brick fell into me here and a hold, and I never could do anything. But God spared my life and I am now leading my friends on to glory, though it was not the end of the old life. Thank God that He saw my repentance and blessed my life. I would not turn my hand to it to which I would not turn my hand to it."

The great forger worked almost exclusively on paper of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company, United Railways of New Jersey and the Fifth and Sixth Street Passenger Railways stock. He would take the certificate for one or two shares and raise it from one hundred to two or three hundred. Then he would take the raised securities to a bank, borrow on it a loan for sixty per cent of its value and leave it as security.

Only by the books of the companies concerned was it known that these shares had been raised. There was no mark on the paper, no removal of the gloss.

Baby's "Bargain Day" Layette.

The Patterns and Directions for Making All These Pretty Clothes at Home Yourself Are Offered To-day for Ten Cents.

HERE is another bargain in patterns for tiny folks. A member of the household whom we all love and cannot forget is the wee person who does not bother his, or her, head about clothes, but for whom mother is always planning and keeping her fingers busy plying the needle. During baby's first days his wardrobe must be quite as complete as his devoted mother can find time to make it. To fashion such tiny daintiness is a work of delight, and the patterns shown here will assist many a mother to make the small clothes with little trouble. The dress has a round tucked yoke, and neck and sleeves edged with embroidery for its only adornment. The tiny kimono will find use almost every hour in the day to protect the delicate little person from sudden cold and change of temperature. The petticoat consists of a full gathered skirt and a body part, and requires 1¾ yards of flannel and ⅝ yard of muslin. Lawn, mull or nainsook will serve for the dress, while some soft French or outing flannel would develop the kimono. The dress requires 2¼ yards of 36-inch material and the kimono ¾ yard.

The patterns for making the complete infants' set—dress with one-piece yoke, a one-piece sack, a petticoat and pinning blanket—are offered to-day for 10 cents, together with full directions for making them at home yourself.

Fill in the accompanying blank, giving your full name and post office address, and mail with 10 cents in money or stamps to

"Infants' Set Patterns,"

HOW FAR CAN YOU RIDE FOR A NICKEL?

Sam Loyd's Puzzling Transfer Game.

Did you ever figure out how far it is possible to ride for the price of one fare, by taking advantage of the street railway company's system of transfer tickets? In some cities it is possible to keep on riding all day long if you want to by simply getting transfers from one car to another.

Here is an interesting little problem in transfer tickets. The diagram shows eight intersecting streets and avenues with two car tracks on each. You get on a car at the point indicated on Avenue B, and pay your fare and ask for a transfer. After being transferred to another car you get another transfer ticket, and so on, never covering the same route twice, and seeing just how long a trip you can make.

It is possible by getting transferred at the right places to travel 48 blocks. See if you can show how it is done.

SEE WHAT HAPPENED TO THE UGLY DUCKLING.

Copyrighted, 1906, by the American-Journal-Examiner.

Cut out figure A and fold upward the duckling's head and the swan's neck on the dotted lines. Paste the duckling to the swan as far up as the dotted lines. Treat figure B in like manner. Paste the two sides of duckling's head together and paste the swan's neck together. Dry thoroughly. Hold the duckling by the feet. Lift up his body and the ugly duckling will vanish, the beautiful swan appearing in his place.

More Mud Than Thanks for Good Workers.

But what of it? Men must fight for the love of fighting, and for the love of other men. They will get many kicks and few congratulations. Even then they are luckier than the men that don't fight at all.

TOM WATSON, in his magazine, writes the best editorials that are published in the United States. They are the best because they contain more thought, sincerity and honest feeling to the cubic inch of words than any other stuff published in the country.

This month Mr. Watson, who has been dangerously ill, writes in a thinly disguised autobiographical vein, and takes a gloomy, pessimistic view of that man's fate who tries to make himself useful to the world.

He reviews the disappointments, the hopes that die, the success of envy and malice and selfishness.

He says, "No wonder you grow weary. No wonder you feel indifferent.

"The way has been long, and it has been rugged, and at last you are tired.

"You look just a little contemptuously in the very face of Death, and you say in your thought: 'I'm yours sooner or later; take me now if you like.'"

What Watson says in his editorial is said in the picture at the top of this page.

The man who starts out sincerely to make a fight for the under dog, to work for those that need friends, doesn't have the most cheerful kind of a time.

For a few minutes, perhaps, in the course of years, he has sympathetic friends about him; he may even appear to have for reward the praise and thanks of all the people.

But those few minutes of satisfaction he must pay for with years spent as a target.

Envy, ignorance and slander pursue him.

What is worse than all, he is detested by those whose good opinion he would like, by those who would work with him and value him IF THEY UNDERSTOOD HIM.

The man who starts out to do something new and worth while—in a big way or a little way—is not starting on an easy path.

The man who is truly a great worker can never know rest or happiness.

For the man who always tries to attack the problem that is new is always suspected, always maligned.

AND THERE ARE ALWAYS NEW PROBLEMS, THERE IS ALWAYS NEW, UNEXPLORED WORK for the man that is not satisfied to do one little thing, then sit down and glory in his achievement, or, profiting by cheaply earned popularity, satisfied to turn the popularity into profit.

The fate of the man who works for others in this world, the ending to which he must be reconciled, Buckle, the great historian, has told most eloquently. We are glad to be able to-day to put his pathetically beautiful and resigned thoughts before millions of Americans that may not know them.

First, however, we want to say a few things on our own account about the man that tries to do something useful and what happens to him.

He DOES get kicks and cuffs and abuse. But what of it?

The college boy who goes into a football game gets kicked, nose and shins are skinned. He would not be much of a football player if he didn't expect that.

The greatest public hero never needed as much courage as does the mother of a poor family, never went through the disappointments and the suffering of such a mother.

Of those mothers there are millions. Who pities them, or utters rhapsodies about their hard fate?

The mother produces the new child. Tears, blood, agony and weakness are her reward for this service which she renders to the world.

One child follows another, poverty, worry, anxiety increase with every one.

Does the man with a new idea and the responsibility for its protection BEGIN to suffer or endure what the ordinary mother of a poor family must suffer?

A man is in a real fight, must expect real knocks. He must enjoy the fighting and be prepared in advance for the blows, moral and physical, that the other side is bound to give.

As a matter of fact, the man of to-day who advocates a new truth and tries to work for the disinherited class doesn't need to pity himself very much. He only need look back a little way to see sights that should fill him with self-congratulation.

He can see Giordano Bruno burned alive because he dared to speak his mind and convictions.

He can see women murdered brutally, whole families destroyed, because the head of the family dared to oppose dishonest schemes of the great.

We shall quote to you now Buckle's beautifully told story of the man that tries to be useful to other human beings.

If it should persuade some of you to give a patient and courteous hearing to those that differ with you in opinion, so much the better. This quotation you will find in the second volume of his great work:

"Not for him are those rewards which in other pursuits the same energy would have earned; not for him, the sweets of popular applause; not for him, the luxury of power; not for him, a share in the councils of his country; not for him, a conspicuous and honored place before the public eye.

"Albeit, conscious of what he could do, he may not compete in the great contest; he cannot hope to win the prize; he cannot even enjoy the excitement of the struggle.

"To him the arena is closed. His recompense lies within himself and he must learn to care little for the sympathy of his fellow creatures or for such honors as they are able to bestow.

"So far from looking for these things, he should rather be prepared for that obloquy which always awaits those, who, by opening up new veins of thought, disturb the prejudices of their contemporaries. While ignorance, and worse than ignorance, is imputed to him; while his motives are misrepresented and his integrity impeached; while he is accused of denying the value of moral principles as if he were some public enemy who made it his business to corrupt society and whose delight it was to see what evil he could do; while these charges are brought forward and repeated from mouth to mouth, he must be capable of pursuing in silence the even tenor of his way, without swerving, without pausing and without stepping from his path to notice the angry outcries, which he cannot but hear, and which he is more than human if he does not long to rebuke.

"These are the qualities and these the high resolves indispensable to him, who, on the most important of all subjects, believing the old road is worn out and useless, seeks to strike out a new one for himself, and in the effort not only perhaps exhausts his strength, but is sure to incur the enmity of those who are bent on maintaining the ancient scheme unimpaired.

"And, let him toil as he may, the sun and noontide of his life shall pass by, the evening of his days shall overtake him and he himself have to quit the scene, leaving that unfinished which he had vainly hoped to complete. He may lay the foundation; it will be for his successors to raise the edifice. Their hands will give the last touch; they will reap the glory; their names will be remembered when his is forgotten."

It is true that the world doesn't treat very gently those that try to serve it.

But the man who wants to make himself useful and make his life worth while must understand conditions in advance.

If you want money and an easy life, get a job with Rockefeller or one of his kind. Make yourself useful to money, and money will make itself useful to you.

If you want to have a life that is worth while, remember that you must take your pay in your own approval, or in the fun of a good, hard fight.

You have really waited too long to show the real fighter's quality.

Some years ago, when fighting men ruled the world, the man with a new idea ran real risks. He paid with his life, with twisted limbs and burnt flesh, for his freedom of thought.

Now punishment for independent thinking is ridiculously mild. The thinking man is simply hated by overfed idiots.

They feel toward him as polecats feel toward a hunting dog. They hate him, bother him if they can, but run usually.

Certainly you will have mud thrown at you if you try to help those that "work without living," and if you annoy those that "live without working." But once more, what of it?

Wouldn't you rather be a good, honest hunting animal than a well-fed pig in some rich man's sty?

The True Mother Love

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

IT has seemed of late that an epidemic of indiscretion affecting elderly men and young women was passing over the land.

Within a short period of time three young women have married men old enough to be their fathers (or grandfathers) after forcing a mature wife to obtain a divorce.

Scandals affecting the reputation of young women and old men are of too frequent occurrence to cause surprise.

Almost invariably, of course, the man in the case possesses a fortune, and the young woman is benefited financially by the association.

But at what a cost, morally and socially, are such benefits gained. It is not so much with the parties implicated in such affairs that this article deals as with the mothers of the young women brought to unpleasant notoriety through the pursuit of old men admirers.

Mother love is supposed to be a wonderful thing.

It is said by sentimentalists to be the most "unselfish of emotions."

The assertion is, however, open to question.

Observation does not prove it to be a fact.

A seventeen-year-old Delilah, who had shorn a fifty-year-old Samson of his locks of moral strength and who received his affectional and financial attentions to the discomfort of a wife and six children, was sustained and defended in the situation by her "devoted mother."

That "unselfish" woman declared it to be the business of no one outside her family if this married man and father visited her daughter and showered money favors upon her.

He was said to have known her daughter since her childhood, and his interest in her was "fatherly" and "platonic."

There is always one sure test of the extent of the "fatherly" and "platonic" element in a married man's interest in a young woman.

If she is as intimate with his wife and daughters as with himself, if the women of his family receive her with as great cordiality as the husband does, if there are no clandestine meetings or rendezvous and no letters exchanged which the world and the wife might not see, then, indeed, the mother may feel that her daughter has a platonic and fatherly friend.

But even under these conditions the really loving and wise mother does not countenance tete-a-tete calls of the married man upon her daughter or a drive of his [illegible] as her escort, unaccompanied by any member of his family.

The unselfish, unmercenary and kind mother brings her daughter up to young womanhood in a manner and with such ideals that the young woman herself would not permit a friendship with a married man to reach the danger point. She would not receive gifts or attentions from him.

The State of Connecticut is fortunate in having for its prison warden a man of exceptional brain, heart and sympathy, a man who thinks, feels and acts in accordance with the most humane and practical religious principles in his association with unfortunate humanity. Not long ago this man said to a visitor: "CHILDREN WHO RECEIVE THE RIGHT MENTAL TRAINING FOR THE FIRST TEN YEARS OF LIFE NEVER WEAR PRISON STRIPES IN LATER YEARS. ALL CRIMINAL INSTINCTS CAN BE ERADICATED BY FORMING THE RIGHT KIND OF BRAIN CELLS FOR CHILDREN BEFORE THEY ARE TEN."

The speaker did not mean educating children in book lore. He meant teaching them how to think, unselfishly, sanely and sensibly.

Not one mother in a thousand teaches her daughter or her son this three-fold system of reasoning.

The scores of "loving and devoted mothers" of whom the sentimentalists write and talk consciously or unconsciously train the minds of their children to desire FINANCIAL SUCCESS, POSITION AND SOCIAL POWER. Ofttimes children are taught to envy the wealthy and to covet their advantages through listening to conversation of their elders not intended for their ears.

Few little girls of ten, twelve or fifteen can be found who do not cater to the fashionably attired woman, irrespective of her character. They long to emulate her rather than the woman of great mental or moral attainments who makes less show in the world. This is not the fault of the children, but of the elders who have formed their minds.

The mad desire of hundreds of mothers to have their daughters dress well, to appear in "smart" society, and to travel and enjoy the pleasures wealth gives blinds them to the highest ideals of womanhood. The thoughtless, foolish ambition of many a mother to have her daughter "a belle" and to have her outshine other mothers' daughters has proven the first step in the girl's downward path to the position of co-respondent.

Again the slavish, weak devotion of a mother to a daughter's whims and desires from childhood to womanhood helps the girl to ruin.

As a two-year child she sees chocolate drops in the confectioner's window and demands them, and the "devoted mother," who cannot bear to disappoint her beloved child, gives them to her, even while she knows they will harm teeth and digestion.

Later, when the daughter wants the husband of another woman, the mother takes the same stand, she is ready to break through the legal window that her child may have what she wants.

This phase of mother love is pitiful, but was beautiful.

It makes one think of brilliant Julian Gordon's comparison of the average sentiment of mother love to the she-wolf instinct, which tears other animals to feed its own.

I know of a mother who paid a large sum of money from her own purse to induce a wife to give up her husband peacefully to the daughter who wanted him.

The first wife, because of the children needing support, accepted the terms.

The husband divorced her and married the object of his infatuation.

And to this day the mother prides herself upon her devotion to the "best interests of her daughter."

The only mother love which is deserving of respect is that which causes the mother to think always of the development of her child toward the highest ideal of manhood or womanhood.

If a youth indicates a craving for strong drink no woman would be regarded as an ideal mother who procured the intoxicant for him at any cost merely because he wanted it.

The good mother would set about curing him of the diseased appetite.

Noble motherhood seeks to give the world noble daughters and sons.

It teaches children the beauty of self-control, the pride of self-conquest and the necessity for regarding the rights of others, whether in the financial, social or affectional realm.

It teaches CHARACTER BUILDING as the foundation of all religion, and all respectability, and all lasting happiness.

The mother who does not teach these truths in a gentle, patient and attractive form is not a good mother.

She is not a good woman.

There is nothing beautiful about her devotion when she aids and upholds her son or daughter in robbing others of happiness or fortune.

There is nothing admirable in standing by a daughter who robs a home of its husband and father, however she may desire the man.

It is a phase of self-love which masquerades under the name of mother love.

In her secret soul such a woman is saying "Because this is MY DAUGHTER she must have what she wants."

The real mother love would say, "Because this is an immortal soul which I have called into life I am responsible if it does not develop the highest attributes. I must guard and protect and lead and direct it from all wrong and selfish paths. I must teach it to live for humanity, rather than to live for self. I must teach it SELF-CONQUEST, not self-gratification."

It is not a difficult matter for the observing mother to call her child's affection to proofs of the perishable nature of dishonest wealth or disreputably gained pleasures.

It is possible for any woman to convince her little charges if she begins soon enough and is persistent in her instruction that WHAT WE ARE, in behavior and character is of far more importance in the long run than what we HAVE AND DO in the realm of worldly ambition.

No matter how poor a mother may be she can imbed in the mind of her daughter the precious jewel of conviction that it is a much happier fate to work all day and fall asleep at night with no shameful or ignoble secret or purpose hidden from the world than to dwell in idle pleasure and resort to deception and subterfuge to keep some unworthy action from the knowledge of the public.

Money, jewels, fine apparel, dinners and social pleasures and love and marriage gained at the sacrifice of principle, honesty and virtue DO NOT PAY.

This is the work for the devoted mother to impress these old but imperishable truths on her daughter's mind.

The ambition to be a fearlessly honest and true woman, even if it means temporary sacrifice, is the best ambition to give a young girl.

Little Bobbie's Essay on Reading Circles

By William F. Kirk

"Thay got to talking about Missus Gray gitting married aggenn so quick after her divoarce."

REDING cirkels is whare the wimmen go to maik beleeve thay remember what thuy lerned in school about the grate masters of song & story, a grate menny of these cirkels are started every yeer, but vry few of them turn up thare noses at Father Time longer then 3 weeks.

the first week it is fine, all the ladies pick Mister Shakespere for the first victim & thay diskuss Hamlet or Romeo & Juliet. 1 of the ladies has a paper reddy to read, & she gits up & cleers her throte & begins

"glansing back over the palges of the past, no name shines with a briter luster than that of the divine bard of Avon."

I know that is the way thay begin, beekaus I copied this paper from my Ma, she red it at a cirkel 2 weeks ago. it sed

Romeo indeed is gone & the fair Juliet, buried neeth the river of Oblivyun, & the meloncolie Dain sleeps with his 4fathers, but the naim of the immortel bard survives & shal survive when we & those who cum after us have left nuthing but a toom-stone to mark the plais whare lies our erthly clay.

The poems of Shakespere are divine beekaus thay are so full of fealing & steal upon yure hart like the benedickshun that follows after the colleckshun. thay are so loud & cleer as the trumpet & as soft & sweet as the song that lulls the babe to rest at nite.

The poems of Shakespere are full of fealing beekaus thay are so divine, thay soar to the empeeryun & float above us like a chicken hawk watching whom she may devour. thay fill our souls with bliss & eckstasy & plster to us what the wurld was when men were tall & strong & feerless, befoar the blight of the big league & the bookmakers maid them sports. it is true that Othello choked his wife with a pillow, but every woman luvs a master & we can almost worship the grate Moor from this safe distance.

The poems of Shakespere, so divine & full of fealing, float above us & fill our souls with eckstacy & bliss, & maik us envy the ladies of that golden age. Look at the Merry Wives of Winsor. Thay were merry & happy, sisters—look at us!

"Glansing back over the paiges of the past, no naim shines with a briter luster than that of the divine bard of Avon. His poems are full of fealing & soar fur above us."

Ma red this paper to Pa befoar she took it to the reading cirkel, & Pa laffed when she got through. Ma got red in the face & sed Now what are you giggling about you num skull & Pa sed beekaus I am happy to have so brite a littel wife. That maid Ma feel pretty good for a minnit, but Pa maid her mad enuff you bet when he sed If I was you I wud cut out that part about the chicken hawk. Ma sed why & Pa sed beekaus when you read about a chicken hawk at a reading cirkel it will stir up the old hens.

then you ought to have seen Ma, she jest gave Pa one look & sailed out of the room & Pa kept laffing.

As soon as she was gone to the reeding cirkel Pa began to play a card gaim with Uncle Jack. he called it stud poker & he got neerly all of Uncle Jacks munny befoar Ma got back, you bet my Pa is a smart feller. when Ma caim in he sed Well, how did your turn go at the show? Ma looked at him for neerly a minnit & sed Sir, I have nothing to say to you. Pa sed That is the first time in our wedded life, dear, let us maik it a anniversary.

Then he sed Honest, how did thay like yure paper about Shakesperes divine & fealing poems & Ma threw the paper across the room & sed What do you think, thay got to talking about Missus Gray gitting married aggenn so quick after gitting her divoarce & thay didnt give me a chance to read it at all.

Pa sed Why doant you talk it out to Bronx Park & read it to the animals? & that maid Ma laff & she sed I guess you are rite I have had enuff reading cirkel, then Pa kissed her & maid up but he didnt give Uncle Jack any of his munny back.

Reading cirkels are found everywhare & it is not hard to belong beekaus sumbody is always quitting. Pa says if thay wud talk up sum modern author like Marie Corelly or Richard Fox thay wud have moar fun & not brake up so quick. he toald me he wished Ma wud go to one moar meeting, beekaus Uncle Jack was going back hoam in 2 weeks & he wudent git many moar chances at him.

"She jest gave Pa one look & sailed out of the room."

Mirandy on Hypnotism

By Dorothy Dix

"DAT sholy was an interesting piece whut you was a-readin' outen de paper 'bout dat woman whose husband done gallivanted off wid a pretty seventeen-year-old gal, man, an' she ain't a-blamin' him none for segashuatin' off an' desertin' her and her house full of chillen. Hit ain't his fault. Nawm, she say hit's jest de fault of dat young gal wid de blue eyes and de yaller hair dat hoodooed him so he didn't know whut he was a-doin', an' toled him away while he was in a kinder transich.

"Brer Jenkins he explained dat dat was hypnotism."

"It sho does sound lak a merricle lak dat one in de Bible whar Jonah swallowed de whale, when you heahs 'bout a little gal dat ain't scarcely more'n out of short frocks a castin' a spell over a great, big, strong man dat is ole enough to be her pa, an' dat makes him forget dat he's got a wife an' fambly, an' dat he oughter spend his wages in buying his chillen shoes instead of buying his typewriter violets. Hit sholy am a surprising story, but I done heered so many women tell dat de ve'y same thing happen to deir husbands, dat I specks hit must be true.

But dere's one mighty funny thing 'bout hit—all of dem conjer women dat is got de power is young an' slim an' mighty peart lookin', whilst de wives of de men whut got hypnotized are gettin' sorter old an fat, an' I done took notice dat de older an' de fatter de wife is, de easier de man is to conjer. Yassum, a middle-age man wid a wife whut's done lost her figger, an' her looks, sho is whut de professor whut gave a show down at our church fer de benefit of de Furrin Missions called a good subjec'.

Yassum, at dat show de perfessor fix a man wid his eye, an' make a few passes at him an' de man do whatever de perfessor say—he stand on one leg, or he walk on his hands, or he git jest as stiff as a poker or as limp as a dish rag, an' Br'er Jenkins he explained dat dat was hypnotism an' dat whenever nobody git dat kinder influence over you, youse onresponsible, an' hit vois' g't to follow whar dey leads, no matter whedder you wants to go or not.

An' all de time Br'er Jenkins was a prognosticating 'bout de influence of hypnotism, I cast my eye aroun' an' I see dat when he 'splatated 'bout a pusson des being lak wax in de hands of anudder pusson whut had de conjur power, Sis Sally Jones, an' Sis Elviry Perkins, an' all de odder sisters wid husbands dat was a sashayin' off after ev'y apry young gal dat came along, was a-noddin' deir heads.

"An' when Br'er Jenkins tell about how when folks is hypnotised dey does things dat dey don't know nuthin' at all about afterwards, I hears Br'er Bill Simmons, whuts done serve a term in de jail fer gittin' too familious wid odder people's hen roosts, sing out 'Amen!'

"An' when Br'er Jenkins say as how some folks is got de hypnotic eye, an' dat all dat dey is got to do is to look at you an' dey can make you do whutever dey wills, an' at dat Br'er Sim, whut got arrested last week in a crap game, hollers out, 'Bess de Lawd, dat's so!' an' den I knowed why folks believes in hypnotism.

"Hit lets um down easy. Yassum, a woman whose husband is done kicked outer de matrimonial traces, would a lot ruther think dat de evil sperrits had got him dan annoder woman, an' hit's a sorter comfort to a man whut strays out of de straight an' nurrer path to feel lak he was conjured into jumping over de fence.

"Yassum, I never is yet met up wid ennybody dat was right dog po', an' lazy, an' shiftless, dat didn't tell you dat de reason dat dey couldn't git along was because dey was hoodooed.

"Going home dat night from de show, Ike up an' sed dat deir suttinly is a lot in whut Br'er Jenkins say about de power of hypnotism.

"'Huh!' I 'spons, 'huccome den dat dey ain't no double action to hit, an' dat dey ain't no good hypnotism? You heahs a plenty 'bout gals whut conjures a man away from his wife, why don't you heah something 'bout a ugly ole wife working a spell on her husband dat keeps him at home wid his fambly? Dere's a plenty of jail birds dat's a claimin' dey was hypnotised into stealin', why don't somebody hypnotise de thieves into being honest?'

"'De way de hypnotism works,' says Ike, 'is lak dis—one pusson is one pole, an' anudder pusson is de opposite pole, an' between dem two poles——'

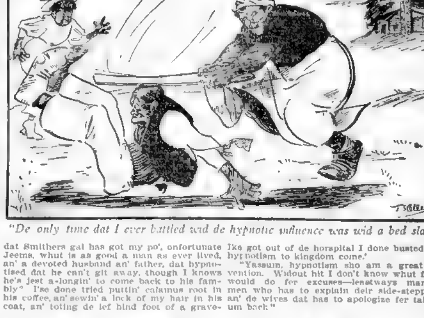
"'I lay I'd take de clothes pole to any woman whut comes a-conjuring around you,' I 'sponds, an' wid dat Ike says I ain't got er scientific mind, an' he gin up trying to explain to me de inwardness of hit.

"An' de ve'y next mornin', as I was a-comin' home from de market I met up wid Sis Hannah, whose husband done lef her wid six chilliens on her hands whilst he chase off after a yaller gal wid jay bird heel shoes.

"'Sis Mirandy,' says she, 'does you know any good way to break a conjer spell, caze dat Smithers gal has got my po', onfortunate Jeems, whut is as good a man as ever lived, an' a devoted husband an' father, dat hypnotised dat he can't git away, though I knows he's jest a-longin' to come back to his fambly? I'se done tried puttin' calamus root in his coffee, an' sewin' a lock of my hair in his coat, an' toting de lef hind foot of a graveyard rabbit in my pocket, but don't none of dem charms seem to wuk, an' I reckon her spell is stronger dan mine.'

"'Sis Hannah,' 'sponds I, 'de only time dat I ever battled wid de hypnotic influence was wid a bed slat. An' it wuked. By de time Ike got out of de horspital I done busted dat hypnotism to kingdom come.'

"Yassum, hypnotism sho am a great invention. Widout hit I don't know whut folks would do for excuses—leastways married men who has to explain deir side-stepping, an' de wives dat has to apologize fer taking um back."



"De only time dat I ever battled wid de hypnotic influence was wid a bed slat."

How to Find the Pole Star and the True North

By Garrett P. Serviss

A CORRESPONDENT asks me to give "a simple, easy and short method for locating the Polar Star from any particular spot the spectator is on." He refers, of course, to the North Pole Star, for there is no conspicuous star near the South Pole of the heavens. The North Pole Star is at present about a degree and a quarter from the true North Pole of the heavens. Consequently, it revolves around the true pole in a circle, with a radius of one degree and a quarter, once every twenty-four hours. It is visible from every part of the Northern Hemisphere of the earth, although to a person near the Equator it would appear just on the edge of the northern horizon. Its elevation above the northern horizon is always equal to the latitude of the observer. The latitude of New York, for instance, being about forty-one degrees, the Pole Star is seen from New York about forty-one degrees above the horizon, or nearly half way up to the zenith. At the North Pole of the earth the star would be over the observer's head.

Considering the extreme practical importance of the Pole Star, it is very fortunate that easy means exist for recognizing it in the heavens and locating its position at any time with regard to the true pole. These means are furnished by two conspicuous constellations in the northern sky—the "Great Dipper" (which forms a part of "Ursa Major") and "Cassiopeia."

I have drawn a little chart showing the relative positions of these constellations and the Pole Star, and if the reader who is unacquainted with the stars will cut this chart out and preserve it he will have at hand a certain means of finding the Pole Star at any time. There are, of course, many other stars in the northern part of the sky beside that shown in the chart, but we need pay no attention to them, and I have left them out to avoid complexity. The Great Dipper and Cassiopeia are so conspicuous that, with a little attention, no one can fail to find them. Simply remember that the chart covers the whole northern quarter of the sky, and that the two constellations just mentioned, instead of being crowded into a small space, are sixty or seventy degrees apart with the Pole Star about half way between them.

It will be noticed that the two stars in the outer edge of the bowl of the imaginary "dipper" seem to point directly to the Pole Star, and on account of this fact they are often called "the pointers."

Owing to the diurnal rotation of the earth on its axis, these constellations complete a revolution about the pole once in twenty-four hours, so that their apparent places in the sky will depend upon the hour when they are looked for. Also, owing to the earth's annual revolution around the sun, the constellations appear to make another revolution about the pole once a year, without reference to any particular hour. For instance, if at 9 o'clock p. m. on August 1 you note the places occupied by the Great Dipper and Cassiopeia, then at the same hour on September 1 you will find that they have swung one-twelfth of a revolution around the pole, the direction of their motion being opposite to that of the hands of a watch held with its back to the north. In six months the Great Dipper and Cassiopeia will have exactly changed places in the sky, but all the while the pole and the Pole Star will remain half way between them. The observer will notice that the half dozen stars which form a little constellation with the Pole Star, marking out the figure of a smaller "dipper" with its handle bent the wrong way, also swung about the pole, as if this "Little Dipper" were fastened to the axle of the heavens by the end of its handle.

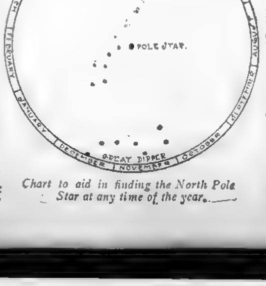

Chart to aid in finding the North Pole Star at any time of the year.

Now, to simplify all this, I have drawn the chart in such a way that the reader who wishes to use it in aiding to find the Pole Star, need only consider the month of the year and the hour of the night when he makes his observation. For convenience the hour is set at about 9 o'clock in the evening, and this is to remain unchanged. Around the border of the chart will be seen the names of the twelve months. In order to see what the position of the Great Dipper and Cassiopeia will be for any chosen month, it is only necessary to hold the chart in such a position that the name of that month appears at the bottom. The bottom of the chart, remember, represents the edge of the horizon in the north, while the top is high up in the sky overhead. The right hand is always eastward and the left hand westward. For example, as the chart is printed in the paper, the month of November is at the bottom. The hour, as before said, is always about 9 o'clock in the evening (for general purposes it is not necessary to make the hour exact). The Great Dipper is seen skirting the edge of the horizon in the north, while Cassiopeia is high overhead. Turn the chart so that August appears at the bottom, and we find that the Great Dipper is then half way down the northwestern side of the sky, and Cassiopeia is half way up the northeastern side. But always the Pole Star appears nearly in the same spot between them.

I say "nearly" because, as remarked in the beginning, the Pole Star is not situated exactly at the pole, but a degree and a quarter away from it. Now, if we know in what direction from the true pole the Pole Star lies, we can tell at any time where the precise north point is. Here again the Great Dipper and Cassiopeia assist us. The Pole Star is a degree and a quarter from the true pole on the side nearest to Cassiopeia. A straight line drawn through the middle of the handle of the Dipper to the pole, and through that to the Pole Star, will, if continued, run through the middle of Cassiopeia. But the Pole Star, as I have just said, is on the side toward Cassiopeia and away from the Great Dipper. Consequently, by observing the places occupied by these constellations, and observing with the eye the imaginary star the true north point can be be ascertained at any time.

Of course, this method will only answer for rough approximation, but it is sufficient for any purpose not requiring exact measurement, and it indicates how, with the proper instruments, exact measurement could be made if desired.

The Last Love of John W. Hutchinson

AT THE AGE OF EIGHTY-FOUR YEARS.

"[illegible] happy [illegible] girl, [illegible] know I thought in her I had found the [illegible] dreams.

THE SEQUEL.

"Then because of this lawsuit Miss Vincent wrote me a letter to the effect that she released me entirely of my engagement.' I think Gracie truly loved me. But it seems that she isn't the Golden Girl after all."—From the remarkable love story of John W. Hutchinson.

THIS shall be the story of John Wallace Hutchinson's 'Quest of the Golden Girl.'

The quest which fiction has set forth does not compare with the rich experience of the grand old man of Lynn, the bard of abolition, the world-famous singer of labor, woman suffrage and anti-slavery.

He has loved sixteen women equally well and [illegible] others. But seriously he has considered marriage with sixteen. He has been engaged to six.

Just now the venerable past master of love is toiling in the web of a breach of promise suit instigated by Ellen O. Wetherell, lecturer and suffragist.

This case has aroused no end of interest. Miss Wetherell and Mr. Hutchinson have been friends for years. Miss Wetherell, who is a woman fifty years old, has always lived in Lynn, where she has been a prominent figure in all public works.

Early in life a serious accident deprived her of the use of her limbs and she has devoted many years to the study of social problems and various sciences.

She is one of the most ardent workers among the woman suffragists, and is in addition a radical Socialist.

Mr. Hutchinson has known her from childhood and has been much interested in her as they shared many views in common and were working along the same line of thought.

No man in all the country has had a more varied and interesting life than John Hutchinson.

Of Remarkable Family.

He is the sole survivor of a family of sixteen children all gifted far above the average. There were ten brothers and six sisters in this most remarkable family. [illegible] all the most famous were John, Judson and Asa, with their rarely beautiful sister Abby.

[illegible] had a marvelous [illegible] New Hampshire they entered upon a career of concert work which took them from one end of the world to the other, and made friends for them among the most noted of people in this country and abroad.

From the early days their two objects were [illegible] abolition of the liquor traffic. They were intensely original and independent in their words and actions.

No matter what the sacrifice made they counted it as naught as long as a principle was involved.

Of them all John was the most noted.

He has given his time, strength and money to the furtherance of his pet projects.

It has been said of him that he would eat off a tin plate and give $100 to charity.

Of late years woman suffrage and socialism have been his most ardent themes. He and Miss Wetherell have often appeared on the platform together, she lecturing and he singing.

Age has never weighed heavily on John Hutchinson, and his mind has remained [illegible].

Perhaps it is [illegible] that has kept him young, for John Hutchinson has a heart overflowing with love—love for mankind, for the poor, the unfortunate, the downtrodden, and, above all, love for women, chiefly for young and pretty women.

[illegible] John W. Hutchinson [illegible]

Why He Fights [illegible]

Then why oppose [illegible] of promise suit [illegible] SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter.

"She's not the golden girl," said the old man, the fire of reminiscence lighting his eyes. "I never considered marriage with Ellen Wetherell [illegible] that I did with Carrie Nation when I met her in Lynn two years ago. They are both doing a grand, good work, but I would never dream of marrying either."

The old man sat resting his arms upon a table. His long silvery white beard swept the cover. Over his shoulders floated a mass of long white hair. For it is one of his eccentricities to wear flowing hair and beard. And, too, he always wears a Byronic collar, broad, low and flat, which lends to him a mysterious, poetic air.

Not only is John W. Hutchinson like Lord Byron in his taste for collars, but in his love for women.

"Let me think," he murmured, leaning [illegible] table and shutting his eyes as though to seek [illegible] memory.

"Why should I love Ellen Wetherell—how could I? Why, I've always loved young women running over with enthusiasm, cheerfulness and good spirits. I can [illegible] Miss Wetherell, but love her, never. I respected her; we had in common many ideals, advanced thought, woman's rights, the labor question, but, after all, it never grew beyond common friendship."

As though tired with the strain of harking back to the past and weary of life, the old man, with a sweeping movement of his arms, exclaimed:

MR HUTCHINSON AND PAULA, "THE BUFFALO GIRL."

Excerpts from the Love Creed of Loving Bard of High Rock

I have worlds of love in my make-up.

Some people have greater capacity for loving than others.

I think my mother endowed me with an abundance of love for good, sincere women.

When enjoying the companionship of a cheerful woman my eighty-four years drop from me and I am a young man again.

Woman was made for man. This infernal habit of suspicion when a man seeks a woman's company is odious.

I would rather marry a good woman to-day, than to have an enormous fortune given to me.

It is natural for a man to love a woman. I have loved women—not woman—many of them. Perhaps it is because I've had so much love to give.

"Life Seems Futile."

"Sometimes my life seems to me to have been as futile as that fly's there on the table. We tarry here a little while, we think and discuss and spend our time breaking down theories others have built, then we vanish, whether into inane nothing or to a glorious future I am puzzled.

"I do so believe in peace on earth, the brotherhood of man, the approaching millennium. And I was about to become [illegible] me a letter to the effect that she released me entirely of our engagement. I was to give her $10,000 on our wedding day.

"Do I think Gracie truly loved me? [illegible] other day as I walked along the path on [illegible] and $500 in a few days, and must have it. And because you're my friend you may as well marry me.'

[illegible] my possessions to find. It was [illegible] from Hawk's Park, Florida, and [illegible] for help. She said she was financially embarrassed and in the name of [illegible] she asked for aid. That will prove that ours was but common friendship."

"Tell me, did you ever find the Golden Girl, the one true woman?"

With a visible effort he roused himself. His face quickened with animation, his eyes lighted.

"I thought I had found her in Gracie," he said, "but it seems she isn't the one after all.

"Are those loves of [illegible] Why call up ghosts of the past? But it may interest you. My first love was Caroline. I was ten. I fought for her at school and gave her little presents. One day she gave them all back. I had intended to ask her to marry me when I grew up. Fifty years later, on her death bed, I happened to be in the town where she was and I saw her.

"I said, 'Caroline, tell me why did you give me back the trinkets?'

"'Because I overheard you tell a boy you'd tell the teacher on him, and I thought it cowardly,' she explained.

Loved His School Teacher

"Next I loved my school teacher, but she moved away. I was quite broken up [illegible].

"Then I loved Hepsie Russell. She was dark and bright and vivacious. But when I ventured on the subject of love she always laughed at me. So I gave it up.

"At that time I lived out West and worked on a farm. I was now eighteen. I played in a band in a town six miles away. One day I saw a tall blonde girl standing on the hotel piazza of the town. I knew at once I would [illegible] her. I met her and [illegible] her to become engaged to me. She said she was too young. I told her if seventeen was too young she would never be old enough to marry, and I left her. For a [illegible] a flock of sheep came by and a dog run [illegible]

[illegible] He Wooed

"Next [illegible] town of Concord, N. H. I was now traveling with a concert band. She was winsome and sweet. I met her and called on [illegible] I love [illegible]

[illegible] were married she cried all day long. Then I learned she had quarrelled with her real lover, and had married me in a fit of pique.

"So, though we weren't truly in love, we lived happily enough, and in 1888 my dear wife died.

"Some time after that I met a dear girl on a train going to Washington. She invited me to call upon her. Soon I loved her and was going to propose one night, when she suddenly said, 'Mr. Hutchinson, you ought never to marry, for your reverence and friendship for all women are ideal.' So I didn't propose.

"And next came Julia. Dear, good Julia. She was my housekeeper here in Lynn for three years. She grew into my heart because she was so kind, solicitous and neat. [illegible] church and live in the 'Daisy Cottage,' which I own, and which stands just above this one.

"It was nearly time for us to be married [illegible] wedding dress. I was going to buy one, but she decided she [illegible] the courage to be married in church. The idea of so many people frightened her, so we never married.

"Soon after I was in New York and met Harriet, a sweet woman. Our friendship grew to love, and we were engaged. I asked her one day, 'What is the longest day in June?' meaning we would have that for our wedding day. She [illegible] refused to [illegible].

[illegible] I met a pretty girl [illegible] grand-daughter and went with us [illegible] on a visit. Our wedding day was [illegible] and I was all prepared to marry her, when a few days before the time, she said, 'John, I've changed my mind.'

"Next I loved [illegible] girl in Washington [illegible]. And a dear woman [illegible] the subject [illegible] were three or four other women whom I loved dearly and [illegible] but none proved [illegible] I met Gracie, [illegible] in Lynn with her mother. I thought I had met my ideal woman. She played the violin with all the feeling and power of a great musician. As the strains of the music floated to me in the parlor of the [illegible] in Boston, where we were attending a reception, I knew I would love [illegible]. And I did love Gracie [illegible] this infernal law [illegible]."

"When you have loved so many women how can you give to one woman a true love?" inquired the reporter.

"Oh, I have worlds of love in my make-up," said the old man, "some people have greater capacity for loving than others. I think my mother endowed me with an abundance of love in my heart for good, sincere women.

"When enjoying the companionship of a cheerful woman my eighty-four years drop from me and I am a young man again.

"Woman was made for man. This infernal habit of suspicion when a man seeks a woman's company is odious.

"I would rather marry a good woman to-day than to have an enormous fortune given to me.

"It is natural for a man to love a woman. I have loved women, not [illegible] perhaps it is because I've had so much love to give."

Again the bard of Lynn fell into a reverie, and the reporter left him enjoying the rich stores of his memory, his [illegible] future and his erratic [illegible].

The Problem of Old Age

Weekly Sermon for Readers of the Boston Sunday American

By the Rev. George Wolfe Shinn, D. D., Rector of Grace Church, Newton

If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?—St. John, xxi., 22.

THERE is only one instance, so far as we know, of a man's being absolutely sure of his growing old. Many others HOPE to reach old age. Some think their prospects exceedingly favorable. The majority take it for granted that somehow they are to stay on and on here indefinitely. They are quite sure that other men will die.

The departure of these other men seems to imply their own remaining, and so there is strengthened this EXPECTATION of continuing on. Yes, they expect to live on, and that means growing old.

But how does anyone KNOW that he is to see old age? We know of only one man who could be sure of it, and that was St. Peter. You will recall how that was. His Master, the Lord Jesus, who knew all things, told him what would happen to him WHEN HE GREW OLD.

You will find the record of this strange but most suggestive conversation at the close of St. John's Gospel. In it is the Master's prediction of the death of St. Peter IN OLD AGE BY VIOLENCE. He must die, but not until he had grown old. He would live to be old; he would be made a prisoner and he would be put to death in his old age. It all happened just so. St. Peter lived for thirty-four years after that conversation and was put to death by crucifixion in Rome when he was going on toward eighty years old. He was the one man who had the positive assurance that he would live to be old.

"When thou shalt be old," said our Lord to him, and no doubt the Apostle labored with greater zeal and earnestness and boldness because he not only felt that he was immortal until his work was done, but that old age must first come to him before that work was finished. Of course, he could not say what the Master meant by old age as far as the number of its years was concerned, whether seventy or eighty or one hundred, but it was something off there in the future. We would know something of his feeling if we could be assured that we would all live thirty-five years longer.

Suppose it were made known to us by some infallible authority that no one of us would die until the year 1950! It would make a vast difference in the way we looked at our work. It would have a strong influence over our plans. Let us hope that it might have upon us all the same effect it had upon St. Peter, and that we would rejoice to do all WE could in the allotted time of our stay.

But it is not so much about St. Peter's old age that I wanted to speak as of the old age of St. John.

You will recall that after our Lord had predicted the old age and the tragic death of St. Peter, the man to whom He was speaking wanted to know something about St. John's future, so he said, "Lord, and what shall this man do?" It was not an impertinent question. He was not reproved for asking it. He was prompted partly by curiosity, but also by the kindest interest in his friend St. John, to know what this infallible authority, Christ, had to say about his stay on the earth. Would St. John live long? Would he grow to be an old man? Our Lord did not gratify the curiosity and the interest which St. Peter showed. He would not say whether or not St. John was to live long, and whether or not he would meet a violent death. He simply replied: "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me."

Our Lord's words do not forbid our thinking of what really followed in the case of St. John. We are looking back at history which has been made. St. Peter wanted to look into history which was as yet unmade.

We look back to that conversation on the shores of the lake, and we trace the career of the beloved disciple down through a half century until we see him bowed with the infirmities of age. They lead him into the assembly of the Christians at Ephesus on the Lord's day. No longer able to officiate with the old force and fervor which he has shown so many times before, the aged bishop stands up and repeats his one exhortation, "Little children, love one another."

Do you ever realize that St. John stands for us as the representative of a Christian old age? We have many representatives of other periods of life, childhood, youth, manhood, but here is the man whom we must think of as in a high sense the typical old Christian. St. Paul called himself "Paul the Aged," but that Apostle did not round out so many years as did St. John, and St. Paul labored actively until his last imprisonment led to his martyrdom. St. John lived his active life of toil and adventure, then his more quiet but none the less useful life of retrospection, and then, last of all, that period of waiting for the end. The Master's plans for St. John included not only an active period of troubled labors, but a period of intellectual activity, and finally a period of patient waiting for the summons to depart.

We are hearing a great deal in these days of the weakness and deficiencies and the unreliability of old age.

Proposals have been made of late for the crowding out of those who are advancing in years and the filling of their places with younger persons. There has been as yet no agreement as to where the line should be drawn. Some would draw it at forty years, others at fifty and many at sixty. Sober and sensible people say that it is impossible to make any hard and fast rule, because some men at fifty are more vigorous than others at thirty, and not a few at seventy are found to be in the full tide of their usefulness. The fact is that men differ in their staying and in their working powers. There is with some a speedy exhaustion of their faculties. They grow old soon. With others there is a saving up of ability, which becomes more valuable as there is added to it the calmness of advancing years.

We have reason to thank God that there are a great many people of forty, fifty, sixty or seventy who are not worn out, used up or inefficient. It is only necessary to look around and see what men have accomplished after they have gone beyond forty or fifty or sixty years to see how wrong it would have been to condemn them to seclusion as old men. You will find a very long list of authors, lawyers, judges, doctors and business men who have accomplished far more in the later periods of their life than they did in their earlier periods.

Thinking of this one case which is just now before us we may ask would it not have been a great calamity if St. John had been taken away from the world before he had written the fourth Gospel and the Revelation? We must never let any arbitrary line be drawn, but must subject each case to scrutiny. It must not be supposed to settle the question of efficiency when we know that a man has reached say his fiftieth year, or even his sixtieth year.

AGE SOMETIMES HAS BUT LITTLE TO DO WITH DETERMINING WHETHER OR NOT ONE HAS GOT TO THE END OF HIS USEFULNESS. EACH CASE MUST BE STUDIED BY ITSELF.

But I am less interested in determining this question of when a man has reached old age than in bringing before you two considerations which are suggested by the case of St. John. ONE OF THESE IS THAT EACH PERSON WHO IS GROWING IN YEARS MAY REGARD HIMSELF AS IN A SENSE TARRYING HERE FOR THE LORD JESUS. It may not be with the distinct idea of expecting to see the Lord again visibly present on the earth, but there may be the conviction that one is tarrying for His Lord in that he is waiting for His call to go hence. The person growing old may feel that his time is in the Lord's hands and that he cannot be forgotten.

A good while ago an English regiment was sent to hold a strategic position in India. After they had accomplished what they were sent to do they were ordered off elsewhere. In the haste of packing up and embarking they overlooked one sentinel, who had been on duty some distance away from the fort, and they sailed without him. He continued on for weeks and weeks guarding the property put into his charge and struggling with the awful fear that they had forgotten him and that he might never be relieved. No such fear need take possession of any Christian. His Master knows where each disciple is, and knows when to recall him.

And yet it is not uncommon to find disciples of our Lord tempted in just this way. They ask, "Has He forgotten me? Why does He not call me away?" The lesson to be learned over and over when such thoughts come is that old age is a period of waiting for the Lord.

You are kept here until He sees the time is ready for your transfer elsewhere.

Of little use here? Well, that may be. We cannot tell. Happily we can leave all that to Him.

Very tired? Well, that may be, too. A member of a parish years ago used to express herself much disappointed when she got awake in the morning and found herself still in this world. "I hoped I would die through the night," she would say, "but here I am again back in the old place, and I am so tired." Yes, she was very tired, but the Lord knew just when to call her, and when that time came she was taken away.

You may grow very tired. The infirmities of age may become very numerous. But be patient. Hold on to your faith. The Lord will call you in His own good time.

And this leads me to the last suggestion. It grows out of the topic we have been considering, but it is quite likely that some of you will think it rather an odd or a superfluous or a very questionable suggestion. However, here it is. BEGIN NOW TO PREPARE FOR OLD AGE. Yes, prepare for it. You are really determining now by your daily conduct what sort of an old age you are to have. Why not prepare for a cheerful, happy, useful old age? It is not always useful and cheerful and happy. You can make yours so if you will. Live now in such way that your old age may be beautiful and gracious. Draw into your spiritual being now more and more of the grace of God. Make larger room for the blessed Spirit to dwell within you, and then, as age comes, you will not repel those around you by querulousness, impatience and selfishness, but you will attract them by Christian gentleness, and it will be easy for others to live with you. What sort of an old person will you be? You, who to-day are so strong, so busy and so courageous, what sort of old people will you be?

Comey of Attleboro, Mass., was master of ceremonies at a musical at the Irving House and was assisted by Joseph Stacks of Boston, Miss Bertha Harris of Fall River, William Hammond of Brockton, [illegible] Doherty of Boston, Stewart Robson, Mrs. J. C. Coffman of New York, George H. Dunn of Brookline, Robert Davidson of Roxbury, Edward Nolan, William Ford and Charles Sekowski of Attleboro.

Rev. William F. Bradlee of Waterville is passing the month here with his family.

Rev. and Mrs. E. H. Newcomb of Newburyport, Mass., have gone to Northfield, Mass., where they will remain a few days before returning home.

Rev. F. [illegible] of Biddeford has been the guest of Henry G. [illegible].

Dr. and Mrs. Howard W. Knight of Lowell, Mass., are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Charles [illegible] Batchelder.

Captain Gaskin of the Boston Police Department is at the Seashore House.

Miss Edith Maybury of Brookline, Mass., a teacher in the public schools of that town who has been passing her vacation in Nova Scotia, is the guest of Mrs. Walter I. Dennett.

Judge B. F. Cleaves of the Biddeford Municipal Court has arrived at Beachwood.

Mr. and Mrs. William Tarbox and children of Boston are occupying a cottage at Grand Beach.

Dr. E. H. Pillsbury of Brooklyn, who was a classmate of President Roosevelt in Harvard College, was at the beach this week.

Among the recent arrivals from Barre, Vt., are Mrs. Carrie Yeartaw and daughter Blanche, and Mrs. Margaret Clark.

In a series of ten whist games at the Aldine this week J. C. Baumgarten of Saginaw, Mich., and F. G. Appleby defeated Messrs. Felt and Nichols, the New England crack whist players.

The greatest event of the week in sporting circles was the baseball game at Seaside Park when the Seasides of this town defeated the professional team of Biddeford 5 to 2. The local team has been defeated but once this season.

LIFE AT RANGELEY LAKE IS VERY GAY THESE AUGUST DAYS AND THE FISHING IS EXCELLENT

Rangeley, Me., Aug. 5.—The storm which has been all over the country did not pass this region by, and the rain fell in torrents while the wind that blew across the lake was a reminder of October days and not August ones. Cheery fires added warmth and comfort, but now the sky is blue and the air warm, giving the promise of good old fashioned August days.

The Rangeley Lake House has been a merry place. The guests while indoors enjoyed card playing, reading, writing and the music of Priscilla Alden's orchestra.

One day last week a wealthy young Japanese gentleman, Mr. Y. Kinishita of Tokio, who came to this country to look over the railroads, and was recently in Portland in consultation with the Maine Central Railroad officials, came to his hotel for a short stay.

Much sympathy is expressed for Mrs. Charles S. Burr of Brooklyn, N. Y., who with her three daughters and sister, Miss Anna Plummer, and maid, were happily located at the Rangeley Lake House to remain into September. Mr. Burr, who was to sail for Europe the next day, attended a banquet of a Masonic lodge, was taken suddenly ill and died at the Union Club at Brooklyn. Mr. Burr was a well-known wealthy New Yorker.

Mr. Frederick Skinner, who has been fishing daily since the first of the season, reeled in his line this last week and returned to Boston. Little is known as to this enthusiastic angler's good luck, for he never reveals his fish, only now and then kills one for the table. Yet it is a fact that he has taken this season weighing two or over [illegible] pounds ten ounces.

Among the arrivals at the Rangeley Lake House this week for an extended stay is Dr. Edward Brooks, superintendent of the public schools of Philadelphia, accompanied by his wife and Miss Lysle.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis McLain of St. Augustine, Fla., have come to Rangeley for some of the famous fishing and outdoor life. Mr. McLain is president of the Bank of St. Augustine, also of its noted golf club, and is well known in yachting circles.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter F. Angell of Providence, R. I., who are at their charming little Summer home, Camp Eothen on Long Pond, are often guests of the hotel. They have been entertaining the following friends at their camp: Mr. F. E. Codman from England, Mr. E. S. Hart of Providence, Miss G. E. Martin of Boston, and as the latch string is out others are soon to arrive.

Mrs. J. B. Marble and daughter Rachel have been visiting with Mrs. Ralph F. Kendall at Portland this week.

Among the late comers who are to tarry at this hotel for some weeks are Dr. and Mrs. A. C. Doten of Worcester, Mass.; Walter Hunnewell, Jr., of Wellesley, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph C. Hart and daughters, Miss Helen and Miss Elizabeth, of Hartford, Ct., who were here last season and are welcomed again for a long sojourn.

A delightful society event occurred last Wednesday afternoon, when Miss Mildred Sears of Cambridge, Mass., who was here with her aunt, Mrs. Edward Crocker of Fitchburg, Mass., gave a farewell party to Miss Helen Trump, a charming young lady of Philadelphia, who with her parents have been here for a month. Two three-seated buckboards, driven by spirited horses, took the party to Haines Landing and return. The chaperones who were in the first team were Mrs. W. B. Wardsworth, Mrs. T. H. Bauchelle and Mrs. Eugenie Brown of New York, Mrs. Seymes of Hartford and Edward Crocker. The young people comprising the party were Miss Trump, Miss Mattie Wardsworth of Plainfield, N. J.; Miss Louise Seymes of Hartford, Ct.; Miss Cora Stanton of New Orleans, La., and Miss Sears; Mr. Sanley Brown, Mr. Harry Bauchelle, Mr. Willard Wardsworth of New York and Mr. Bruce Cartwright of Honolulu.

The golf links are in excellent shape, and the many players from the hotels are joined by lovers of the game who are stopping at the nearby hotels and cottages, as these are the only links at the Rangeleys.

Among the new arrivals at the Mountain View House during the last week are Mrs. A. R. Bolles and daughters, Miss Ethel and Miss Nadine Bolles, of Hartford, Ct.; H. C. Nerwin of Boston, Mrs. C. A. Buttrick and daughter, Miss Louise, of New York, Mrs. Harry Cassard of Philadelphia, who is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Comee of Boston at their log cabin. Mrs. Dr. Harry Rice of Boston gave an afternoon tea to a party of ladies at the hotel at Don't Worry Camp one afternoon this week.

When the train reached the Oquossoc station one noon this week there was part of the body of a dead deer on the tender of the engine. Not far below the station as the train was coming full speed through the forest, two young deer bounded directly in front of the train. The engineer reversed and did his best to prevent the breaking of the Maine game laws, but it was too late and both deer came to a sudden death.

Mrs. Frank L. Seeley, one of New York's well known singers, is a great favorite at this hotel, as she often favors the guests with her sweet songs.

Mr. and Mrs. Zenas H. Jones of Malden, Mass., arrived here this week for an extended stay. Mr. and Mrs. Howard N. Simpson, Miss Leila and Miss Sarah Simpson of Rochester, N. Y., and friend; Mr. Daniel Emerson of New York, Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Adams of Upper Montclair, N. J.; Mr. and Mrs. E. Kunke of New York are also among those recently registered here to spend August.

Mr. and Mrs. F. E. White of Rumford Fall have closed their camp which has been opened since the first of June.

Mr. H. L. Buss of Boston entertained a party of eight ladies from the hotel for a breakfast and dinner at Rangley Friday.

The Mooselookmeguntic House and connecting camps, Billy Soule's Camp at Pleasant Island, Bald Mountain Camp and Middle Dam, Mingo Springs and Pickfords Camps are all entertaining an unusual number of people, while at most of the private camps the flag is flying and the latch string is out.

Robert Gardiner of Boston caught a three-pound trout near the island and Keating Johnson, a Philadelphia lad, a pair of trout that weighed four and one half pounds and two and one half pounds.

In the log cabins at the Birches, Mooselookmeguntic Lake, there are a hundred guests and life is gay.

Squirrel Island

Squirrel Island, Me., Aug. 5.—The annual meeting of the Squirrel Island village corporation was held last Saturday evening at which A. H. Davenport of Malden, Mass., was elected president for the ensuing year, and George K. Boutelle of Waterville the clerk.

Society on the island is interested to learn of the engagement of Miss Caroline Frye Briggs, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred H. Briggs of Auburn to young Garrett A. Hobart, Jr., son of the late Vice-President. Miss Briggs is a grand-daughter of Senator William P. Frye.

It has been decided to produce the comedy, "The Private Secretary," at the casino next Friday evening. It will be staged under the direction of David Owen of Augusta, and the cast includes some of the leaders of the island society.

William E. Stanwood of Wellesley, Mass., has arrived here for the month.

Miss Emma Frye White of Lewiston has arrived on the island for the rest of the season.

Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Stone of New York arrived this week as the guests of the Misses Camp.

Mrs. John Ford of Youngstown, O., arrived Tuesday for the season.

Miss Elizabeth Peables and Miss Ada Wheelock of Auburn and Miss Henrietta Rice of Portland were guests of Mrs. George K. Boutelle of Waterville this week.

Mrs. George Alden and son, Payson, have arrived from Hot Springs.

The island colony was interested to learn of the engagement of Horace M. Wheelock of Boston and Miss Lillian M. Treat of Detroit.

Mrs. George Mutell of Springfield, Mass., has sold her cottage to Hurlbert Holden of Springfield, and the Rebekah White property has been sold to Mr. and Mrs. M. M. Johnson of Waterville. The Johnsons will erect a handsome new cottage next season.

Rockland

Rockland, Me., July 5.—A tennis tournament opened this week with a large number of entries. A handicap golf tournament is on and a silver cup will be given by Colonel J. B. Speed of Louisville, Ky.

Among the recent arrivals are: W. Griffin Gelbel, Wyacotte, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. Egmont M. Heller, New York; John Aspell and wife, New York; Mr. and Mrs. William K. Nearso, Prout's Neck; Frederick R. Bogardus, W. B. Bacon, Boston; Merle Middleton, Alfred Pearce, Philadelphia; William Heyburn, Louisville, Ky.; Mrs. E. M. Carroll, Mabelle E. Carroll, Boston; Miss A. C. Robinson, Camden; Miss Whooper, Exeter, N. H.; Miss Delphine Herbert, Montreal; Herman V. Hartwell, Louisville, Ky.; Mr. and Mrs. James P. Rappelyea, Brooklyn; J. M. Emmons, New York; Arthur Judson, Pottstown, Pa.; Mrs. J. D. Cox, Miss Prentiss, Miss Smith, Miss Cox, Cleveland; Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Chamberlain, Mr. Frost, Portland; Mr. and Mrs. Miles Bracewell, New York; Mr. and Mrs. George P. Lawrence, North Adams, Mass.; Dr. and Mrs. B. H. Pillsbury, Lowell, Mass.; M. T. ### Hampton Beach

Hampton Beach, N. H., Aug. 5.—The attempt to run this beach wide open Sundays, after being warned not to by the county authorities, has got the promoters in trouble. Two weeks ago a deputy sheriff was at the beach and all forms of amusement, especially pool room and bowling alleys, were ordered closed. Last Sunday everything was wide open and the county authorities have again taken a hand in the game.

The Selectmen are also closely watching Sunday business at the beach. Some of the dealers who could not get a license have taken to selling a Massachusetts beer which they claim is but one per cent alcohol and some of this has been taken and sent to a chemist to analyze.

Wednesday was Farmers' day at the beach. Among the speakers at the convention of the Grangers was Governor McLane, Congressman Sulloway and Senator Burnham. Ex-Governor N. J. Batchelder was a spectator.

Dr. C. E. Burkstead and wife of Concord are at the Radcliff for the month of August.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Gerrish of Alton arrived here this week to pass the month.

Mrs. Elizabeth G. Noera of Cambridge gave a song recital at the New Boar's head house early in the week.

The Haverhill city band will furnish the concerts at the Casino for the remainder of the Summer.

Wednesday, August 16, has been set aside as Amesbury day and about all of the residents of that city are expected to pass the day here.

Charles Bradford and R. E. Wood of Boston arrived this week to be guests at Union Bluff.

John Holland of Manchester has joined his family at their cottage at Union Bluff.

A driver of an automobile was giving some women a ride in their bathing suits early in the week, and to be obliging he backed his car into the surf for them to get out. The rear wheels stuck in the soft sand and it was a hard half hours' pull for a pair of horses to release it.

Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Maguire, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Rogers and child, Mrs. A. H. Hanson, Miss Helen Hanson and Mrs. T. Ryley, George Ryley and Ruth H. Ryley of Lawrence, Mass., are at the Fairmount Hotel.

Sunapee Lake

Sunapee Lake, Aug. 5.—The much needed rain reached Lake Sunapee with a vengeance this week. Every day the Summer visitors have been greeted with refreshing showers, and the steamboat and fishermen have been made happy by the generous down pour, which has raised the lake four and one-half inches. It had reached the lowest mark for years last week and but for the pelting showers dire things would have been predicted.

The fishing has been very unsatisfactory during the week, owing mostly to the low water.

Among the most successful anglers is William C. Stevenson of Philadelphia, who brought in a string of bass weighing twelve pounds. A. Frost of Brooklyn, N. Y., caught four bass weighing nine pounds. Mr. Isaac Rawson of Newport, N. H., landed a native trout weighing three pounds.

Among the prominent Boston society people who arrived at the Ben Mire Inn during the week are Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. Lovering; Mr. W. P. Edwards, Mr. and Mrs. E. Norris, Mr. H. W. Lothrop, Mr. Theodore Earl, Miss Bertha L. Marnham, Miss Lucy Blake Clapp, Miss Marian L. Clapp, J. J. Ducey, Miss J. F. Lenard.

The regatta has awakened unusual interest this year, owing to the large number of launches and sailing craft that are on the lake this year, and there is intense rivalry between the respective owners. A large number of beautiful trophy cups has been purchased by the committee, and the races promise to be closely contested.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Burns of Moultonboro, N. H., have opened their cottage at Georges Mills.

Dr. George Kober of Washington, D. C., is at the Pleasant House during this month. He has just returned from an extensive Western trip.

Among the prominent New England people at Pleasant Home are E. C. Dreyfus, C. M. Goodspeed, Mrs. M. B. Goodspeed, Brookline, Mass.; G. F. Byford, Miss Laura Cushman, Miss Marian Cushman, Miss Alice Cushman, Mrs. Edith C. Cushman, Frank Fitzpatrick, Archie McInnis, Miss Helen E. Harrington, William Harrington and Miss Mildred Harrington of Boston, Mass.

Miss Helen F. Hatch, Miss Mary L. Hatch are occupying the Martin cottage at Georges Mills during August.

Dr. J. H. Wallington and Dr. H. L. Horban of East Boston are at the Chase cottage for the present month.

The guests of the Pleasant Home have been making long drives to the Corbin Park, where they have been able to see the largest herd of buffalo in the world. One party saw the entire herd, which numbered 173 buffalos, beside a number of deer, elk and wild boar.

Henrietta Crosman, the actress, is at her cottage at Burke Haven.

Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Butler of Auburndale, Mass., are guests at the "Outlook." Mr. Butler, who is a painter of prominence in New England, has fitted up a studio in the Georges Mills schoolhouse and intends to paint the scenery around the Mills, which he considers as ideal.

Mr. F. F. Ryder of Boston and family are guests at the Pleasant Home for the month of August.

Mr. and Mrs. G. M. White of New York city are occupying The Wolcott Cottage for the remainder of the season.

Mr. and Mrs. Billy B. Van have closed their cottage, Bolivar's Rest, for the season and returned to New York. They are making preparations to put Mr. Van's play, "The Errand Boy," on the road.

Kittery Point

Kittery Point, Me., Aug. 5.—Miss Sarah Farmer has issued an invitation through the State Department for the members of the peace envoys to visit Greenacre during their stop at the Wentworth.

Among the distinguished people who are at Greenacre this Summer is Hon. P. Ramanathan, K. C., the solicitor general of India. He is stopping at the Inn for the month of August and is delivering a series of lectures. Professor A. E. Dolbear of Tufts College was a lecturer at the school this week.

Mr. and Mrs. John J. Hall, Katharine Reynolds and maid, of Brighton, are registered at the Champernowne at Kittery Point.

W. T. Stockham of Portland is at the hotel Champernowne.

Mrs. J. Will Rogers and two children of Lynn are visiting in the village.

Rev. and Mrs. George H. Williams, who have been here all Summer, left for their home in the West this week.

Mrs. Cyrus Brigham and Miss N. S. Gregerson of Boston are registered at the Champernowne Hotel at Kittery Point.

Mrs. Nellie Trumbly and Miss Helen of Port Jefferson, N. Y., are registered at the Parkfield Hotel.

The family of Richard P. Oulahan, special reporter for a New York paper, who is here for the peace conference, have taken rooms at the Champernowne Hotel, Kittery Point, for August.

Cape Elizabeth

Cape Elizabeth, Aug. 5.—Misses Eleanor Cram Smith and Marion Smith of Boston and Miss Merrill of East Orange, N. J., annual guests at the Cliff House, have arrived here.

Rev. Frank Hay Staples and Miss Harriet Staples of Baltimore, formerly of Portland, are guests at the Cliff House.

Lieutenant John Lipop, U. S. A., of Fort Williams is on a fishing trip in Canada.

Late arrivals at the Cliff are Mr. and Mrs. F. Taussig, Felix Taussig, Brookline; Alfred W. Jones, J. Olea, James F. Cormick, F. C. T. Beck, W. M. Payson, Boston; Addie E. Langdon, Brockton, Mass.; Mrs. John D. Watson, New York; Rev. Floyd Appleton, Brooklyn; A. A. Magee, Montreal; Sadie L. Fanning, Campello, Mass.

"SMART" SOCIETY RESORTS ARE AS GAY NOW AS PEOPLE AND MUCH MONEY CAN MAKE THEM

NEWPORT, Bar Harbor and the Berkshires—the really "smart" society resorts—are gay as people and money can make them.

[illegible] is particularly lively now, [illegible] age element here in force. [illegible] is well patronized. The [illegible] of [illegible] to Bailey's [illegible] of dinners, dances and so on [illegible] hotel at the beach that the [illegible] thing and is being much [illegible] the feminine contingent. The sombre blacks and the quiet blues are giving way to gayer patterns and more elaborate cuts.

At Bar Harbor, with its somewhat more conservative element, the life is a little quieter, but is none the less enjoyed. There are many house parties and the hotels are filled.

At Lenox and the surrounding Berkshire places the houses and hotels are receiving more and more occupants as the Summer advances. With the opening of the Fall season, when the Berkshire scenery makes this section one of the most beautiful in the State, Lenox life will be at its height.

Miss Carolyn Peck had as guest this week Miss Virginia Shepley of Providence, who is spending the Summer at the Shepley country place on Warwick Neck.

Among the most interested spectators of the polo matches this week were the veteran P. F. Collier, who came over from Newport with his son, and Mrs. P. F. Collier, Jr., who was Miss Van Alen. Others who came down for the polo games were Sidney C. Lowe of Chicago, the noted player, Byron S. Watson of Providence, who played on the New Haven Freebooters, and Mr. and Mrs. John R. Gladding.

Mr. and Mrs. William B. McElroy of Baltimore are here as the guests of Dr. and Mrs. James E. Sullivan at "Youghal," having arrived several days ago from their Summer home in the Adirondacks. Mrs. McElroy is a sister of Mrs. Sullivan and formerly resided in Providence.

A report that Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans will come here the latter part of next week with his battleship squadron has created quite a flutter among the belles and beaux, as the officers of the fleet are very popular here.

Berkshire Hills

Lenox, Aug. 5.—This week preparations were begun for the Lenox Horse Show, the event that marks the climax of the Lenox season. The show will be held at William D. Sloane's farm, Highlawn, between Lenox and Lee, and near the country residence of Mr. and Mrs. George Westinghouse. The program of events is now under consideration, and many variations from that of last year will be noted. The influence of the Berkshire hunt, organized in the late Fall of 1904, will be shown in the increase in the number of jumping events from one to three and in the division of the saddle horse classes.

Traveling automobilists continue to make Lenox their headquarters while touring through Massachusetts. This week has witnessed the arrival and departure of several large parties who, after a few days of touring the mountains, have set out for the shore or for Saratoga. W. Gould Brokaw of New York, accompanied by Marquis [illegible] of Madrid, Spain, Mrs. James E. Martin of New York and Mrs. Frank Ellis of Atlanta, was in Lenox over night while en route for Saratoga. Mr. and Mrs. Grant Walker of Boston have been in Lenox making short tours of the Berkshire hills. During the week Mrs. George Westinghouse has joined the Berkshire Automobile Club, and Robert de Peyster Tytus of Tyringham has joined the ranks of automobilists. Talk of a floral automobile parade is rife, and a meeting is to be held to talk over the project. Court Wm. Sloane of the [illegible] [illegible] this week in his motor [illegible] tour of the Massachusetts coast resorts.

Field and Mr. and Mrs. George W. Folsom have been among the hosts and hostesses. Mr. and Mrs. Archibald McNeil of Bridgeport gave a large luncheon this week for Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Mellen of New Haven.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Wharton are at The Mount for the season. Mrs. Wharton is at work on a serial which will begin in a New York magazine next Winter.

Mr. and Mrs. James J. Hill went to the Adirondacks this week. Mrs. Hill, who is an invalid, was very much benefited by her stay in Lenox and expects to return in the Fall.

Mrs. Charles J. Bonaparte, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, is recuperating in Lenox. Mrs. Bonaparte will be assisted in entertaining in Washington this Winter by Miss S. S. Heydock of Baltimore, who is her guest at Hotel Aspinwall.

Sports have been favored by a large company of cottagers since baseball, cricket and golf were inaugurated here this season. Baseball is very popular and a team has been made up of the young men of the cottages to play William B. O. Field's Elm Court team at Elm Court. William D. Sloane's country place, today. The cottagers' team includes Samuel Frothingham, Laidlaw [illegible] Herber, Shaw, Joseph W. Burden, David T. Dana, Jameson Cotting, Francis Jepson, Jack Greenleaf and Malcolm Sloane.

Next week the new State road, which has been building between Lenox and Pittsfield, will be opened for traffic. The road has been closed now for a good share of a year while the contractors have been employed in constructing about five miles of improved road. Mrs. Rich and T. Auchmuty of New York contributed $2,500 toward its cost and the town of Lenox appropriated about $5,000, the State of Massachusetts making a like appropriation.

Marion

Marion, Aug. 5.—One of the smartest parties of the week was given by Captain and Mrs. H. C. Lewis. Captain Mason stein of Savannah, Ga., was the principal guest.

At the races of the Sippican Yacht Club Miss Martha Brewer won the woman's race. Mrs. A. W. Bliss, in the Dodo, and Miss Natalie, in the Wren, made excellent showings and captured second and third places, respectively. In the race for catboats Miss Margaret Pierson easily outstripped her competitors.

Newport

Newport, Aug. 5.—Society is greatly interested in the arrival of the Prince and Princess Henri Gallard de Bearn et de Chalais (Beatrice Winans), daughter of Ross R. Winans of Baltimore and Newport. The distinguished couple came direct from Lenox, where they were visiting Mr. and [illegible].

[illegible] apartments at the Muenchinger-King cottage the Princess found her boudoir vase heavily laden with choice flowers direct from the Bleak House conservatories.

The Prince and Princess will breakfast, luncheon and dine en famille, in their own exclusive apartments and their attendants [illegible] being selected will have no other [illegible]

[illegible] have the freedom of the [illegible] Bleak House at any and all times during her stay. It was here [illegible] passed a part of her girlhood days. [illegible] will allow the couple free access to the place. There is an iron clad rule against letting anybody into the house, but Potter says he will make this one exception, she being the owner's daughter.

The Princess was cordially [illegible] to make her home while in Newport with her aunt, Mrs. Hutton, at Shamrock Cliff [illegible] the Winans place, but [illegible] seemed to feel that the Prince might perhaps enjoy himself more by being nearer the [illegible]

August Is Acclaimed Best of All Months by Visitors Along North and South Shores

GAYETY REIGNS ON NORTH AND SOUTH SHORES

Up and down the North Shore, from Buzzards Bay to old Salisbury and Rye beaches, there is a continuous chain of gay Summer life.

The big hotel, the humble boarding house, the little cottage and the big house are crowded with old and young. The beaches are lined with bathers. The yachting clubs are keeping open house, and all is fun and merriment.

Over Sunday the attendance is greatly increased. Week-end parties, fleeing from the heated city as early as possible Saturday afternoon, stay till the last trains Sunday night, or even till Monday morning, if they are able to get back to the office in time for the day's work.

These extra vacationists over Sunday, putting in their precious time as gayly as possible, add greatly to the beach life. The strict Sabbatarian might not feel at home in a Sunday of bathing, boating and similar recreation, but the vacationists do, and enjoy themselves hugely.

Marblehead

Marblehead, August 5.—Lovers of yachting have held full sway at this famous watering place this week and seem bound to [illegible] party and [illegible] for the [illegible] of the [illegible]. [illegible] racing under the auspices of the Boston Yacht Club which opened Thursday saw a long list of crack boats entered, and yachtsmen from all along the New England shore have made Marblehead their rendezvous this week.

Hetty Green, America's richest woman, has joined the ranks of Summer tourists here, having arrived on her splendid house boat, the Thetis, on which she is entertaining a [illegible] party. The Thetis is one of the largest house boats seen here this Summer and will remain until the New York Yacht Club fleet puts in here this month. Mrs. Green has been ashore almost daily and has visited many of her friends in the town and at the Neck.

Among the most noteworthy arrivals here this week was Miss Jane Morgan, a popular society woman of Philadelphia, daughter of Randall Morgan, the well known yachtsman of that city. Like her father, Miss Morgan is an ardent devotee of sailing and has the unique honor of being one of the very few women in the United States who has a license as a master mariner. She arrived here on the handsome steam yacht Waturus, which she practically handled alone on the trip here.

Mrs. Herbert Goodwin entertained the Universalist Woman's Club Wednesday afternoon at her home on Goodwin's terrace.

Few places on Marblehead Neck are as charmingly located or more popular with the Summer colony here than "Sky High," the residence of Herbert L. Bowden. The residence is surrounded with quaint gardens and commands an excellent view of the sea and coast. Mr. and Mrs. Bowden have a large number of friends visiting them.

Miss Marcia A. Bradford, the well-known artist and landscape painter, has just completed her studio at Magnolia. She will entertain a party of her Marblehead friends next week.

A lawn party for the benefit of the Baptist Church was held Monday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel H. Graves on Village street.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Preble and family are guests this week at [illegible] Preble's Summer residence on [illegible] avenue.

Trolley excursion parties have made this resort their destination this week in numbers which have exceeded any previous record so far this season. Places of historic interest have been visited generally.

General Manager Samuel Higgins of the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad and family arrived from New Haven this week in the former's special car. They are registered at the Rockmere Inn for the remainder of the season.

Judge Green and family of Cleveland arrived this week in a special Pullman. They will remain here for the next two weeks.

The Marblehead School Board was called on to perform a rather unique duty this week, when it adopted resolutions on the resignation of Miss Mary E. Graves, one of the town's oldest and best known school teachers. Miss Graves had been a teacher in the public schools for fifty-three years.

The regatta committee of the Corinthian Yacht Club has announced a series of open races to be held August 9, 10 and 11 off Marblehead. An open race will also be held August 12. A fine list of prizes is offered and from the present outlook a large list of entries is assured.

Provincetown

Provincetown, Aug. 5.—Governor Douglas and wife are at the New Central.

The Rev. Caleb Fisher and the choir of the First Universalist Church, Lowell, are in town.

Mr. and Mrs. William Hassenberg, Washington, D. C., arrived Wednesday for a three week stay.

Isaac Childs, East Boston, is visiting Captain Samuel Hatch.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Whorf, Winthrop, are at the East End.

Herman Perkins, Everett, is a guest of Miss Lizzie Aiken at her camp, East End.

Mr. Donnelly of Attleboro, a guest at Hotel Pilgrim, smashed the season's record by his catch of a cod weighing forty pounds on the "ledge" during the week. Great sport is being granted the Summer people in the catching of big pollock close to shore at Wood End. Dories fishing there the past week have taken as high as 1,500 pounds per man.

Misses Hester and Ruth Whitcomb, Milton, are guests at McMurray cottage and the Crafts of Milton are at Strong cottage.

Mrs. F. P. Leary and children, Hazardville, Ct., are occupying Swift cottage.

Mrs. Milly Atwood, Brockton, is visiting Mrs. Frank Potter.

William Fish and wife, St. Louis, Mo., are in town for the month.

Mrs. Hattie Baksham, Brighton, is visiting Mrs. Coleman.

A dance was given Tuesday evening at the New Central House, where the officers and some of the cadets of the training ship Chase and fully 100 of the townspeople and Summer visitors were the guests of the hotel management.

Onset

Onset, Aug. 5.—Among the latest arrivals are: Dr. and Mrs. E. P. Jones, Millis; Miss Etta Gammage, Boston; Mrs. Blanche Robinson, Brockton; Mr. and Mrs. Gale, Brookline; Miss Annie McLaughlin, Dorchester; Miss Rose, Dorchester; Wallace Baker, Providence; R. C. Mason and family, New York; and Miss Elsie Clark, Walpole.

The latest arrivals at Point Independence are: Mrs. Frank Lowe, Brockton; Mrs. Chester Weston, Middleboro; Miss Edna King, Cranford, N. J.; Mrs. Harry Clark, Mrs. Sourtleff, Bridgewater; Mrs. H. L. Hunt, Marlboro; Miss Etta Hathaway, Bourne; Dr. A. B. Paun and family, Middleboro, and Benjamin Shaw and family, Middleboro.

TWO STRIKING PICTURES OF MISS ELEANORA SEARS, WHO, WITH HER FRIEND, MRS. F. L. W. RICHARDSON, CARRIED OFF THE HONORS AT MAGNOLIA HORSE SHOW

MISS SEARS AND MRS. RICHARDSON ON THE BEACH AT MAGNOLIA.

At the recent Gymkhana sports held at Magnolia, when the Summer residents of the various North Shore colonies gathered along the beach, Miss Eleanora Sears and Mrs. F. L. W. Richardson were the two Boston girls who carried off the honors for attractiveness. Mrs. Richardson and Miss Sears are very close friends, having many congenial ideas and sharing a warm fondness for athletics, and especially for riding and driving.

They are splendid foils for each other in appearance, Miss Sears being a blonde and Mrs. Richardson, who before her marriage was known as the "beautiful Anne Blake," being a decided brunette with brilliant coloring.

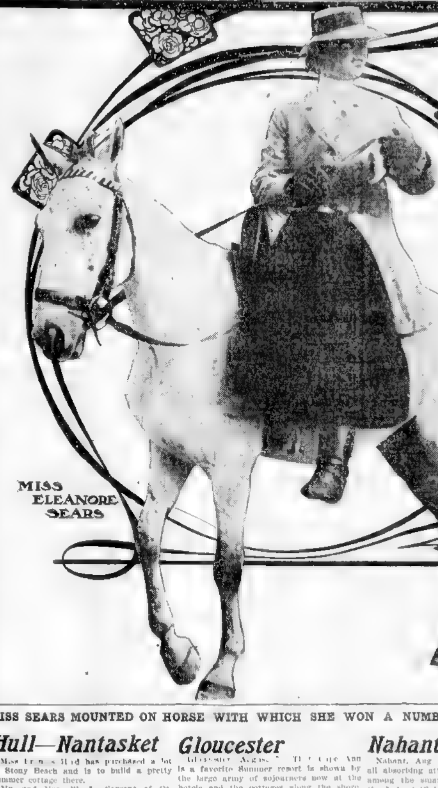
While Miss Sears inclines to blue and gray in her gowning, Mrs. Richardson has a penchant for warmer hues, and frequently wears red or a deep rose pink to great advantage.

Miss Sears and she have been friendly competitors in exhibiting their riding and driving horses at various horse shows, and have lost gracefully to each other, the loser congratulating the victor with enthusiastic sincerity.

Mrs. Richardson has a charming home in Brookline and drives daily along the beautiful roads about her home. She has a superb figure, and dresses in severe tailored gowns.

This season she has worn with a beautifully fitted gown of dark checked tweed a large hat of yellow straw turned abruptly at the side with rose pink trimmings.

Miss Sears is more dashing, original and independent in her manner than Mrs. Richardson, who is rather conservative.



MISS SEARS MOUNTED ON HORSE WITH WHICH SHE WON A NUMBER OF PRIZES.

Magnolia

Magnolia, Aug. 5.—All the hotels are crowded. Magnolia never saw a more brilliant season. Summer parties, luncheons, dinners, dances, boating, bathing, driving, riding and scores of other things hold the attention of the more than 2,000 guests.

The ball at the Hesperus to-night was one of the smartest of the season. Cottagers as well as guests from the other hotels were in evidence, and pretty gowns were in profusion. At the New Magnolia a street and pillow case party furnished much entertainment to the guests, and the cotillion which followed was one of the most successful of the Summer.

The mounted sports last Saturday was a most pronounced success, and being the first event of the kind ever held at Magnolia, it has been much talked of this week. So popular was it taken that it has already been decided to hold a two-day horse show at Magnolia next season, to close with the mounted sports on the third day.

Many of the members of the Summer colony are taking steps toward securing the construction of a breakwater off the beach, and it is thought their efforts may be met with success, as the move is being generally indorsed by the cottagers and hotel guests. Dr. Dakin is at the head of the move.

The New York Athletic and Brooklyn Swimming clubs have been invited to participate in the events of the annual water carnival to be held on August 21. This is always one of the star events of the season at Magnolia.

Among the week's arrivals are Mr. and Mrs. Isaac P. Lombard and Mrs. J. L. Lombard of Chicago, and C. H. Holbrook and Miss D. Holbrook Hare of San Francisco, who have been spending part of the Summer at Poland Springs, Me.

John S. Koehle, a well known New York man, is registered at the New Magnolia for August.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur G. Smith of Rochester, who are spending the season at the New Magnolia, were joined the first of the week by their daughter, Miss Louise Smith, and their two sons, Sibley C. Smith, Harvard, '01, and Gordon A. Smith, Harvard, '01, who will spend the month of August with their parents.

Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Jenkins of New York have been entertaining this week Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Woodsworth of Cambridge.

Mrs. Thomas Cogswell, Mrs. Thomas Story and Mrs. William Tait of Lawrence have been guests of Mrs. William Oswald of Lawrence at the New Magnolia the past week.

Miss Louise Vanderbilt of East Orange, N. J., has been spending the week at the Oceanside, a guest of Miss Coolidge of Boston.

Hingham

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin M. Miller have returned from a visit in East Orleans.

Mrs. Luther A. Douglass, at her home on Lafayette avenue, is entertaining Miss Isabelle Perkins, a former resident of Hingham.

Mr. Alfonse Cevin of Quebec is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Richard McKee at their home on Main street.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Knowlton of New York, who have been the guests of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Gray, have returned to their home.

Mrs. Frederick H. Miller is the guest of her daughter, Mrs. G. N. Ripley, at New Fane, Vt.

Weymouth

Miss Mae Chessman is visiting friends in Concord, N. H.

Miss Madge Pierce is the guest of her parents, Major and Mrs. Elliot C. Pierce, at their home on Commercial street.

Miss Alice Pierce of Webb street has been entertaining her friend, Miss Blance Ingalls of Taunton.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank H. Pray have gone to Auburn, Me., where they will stay for a few weeks.

Mrs. Edward Margetts of New York is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Peter B. Lawson.

Miss Mary McGillicuddy of Winthrop has been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lonergan at their home on Miller avenue.

Miss Ruth Wright of South Weymouth is entertaining her friend, Miss Vera Thayer of Amherst.

George Pitcher of Boston has been visiting relatives in South Weymouth.

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Raymond of East Weymouth are entertaining Miss Gladys Burrell of Whitman.

E. F. Raymond of Rockland has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Raymond of East Weymouth.

Manchester

Manchester-by-the-Sea, Aug. 5.—The Essex County Club in Manchester is the centre of fashion for it is here the cottagers drive every afternoon and entertain their guests with afternoon tea on the broad verandas. Wednesday the band concert brought together the largest assembly of the week, scores of the fashionable contingent driving over from Magnolia hotels, Beverly, Prides Crossing and Hamilton.

Tennis will be the drawing card next week. The midsummer tennis starts Monday with tournaments in both handicap singles and scratch doubles. Eleanor Sears, who won in the singles last year, will be among the players.

Golf, too, is holding the attention of many of the North Shore set. An interesting foursome tournament—the first of the season—was played on the club's links to-day.

Among the more recent arrivals are S. Barton Booth and family of New York, who are located at the Schoeffel cottage on Masconomo street for August. The Booths arrived Thursday with Mr. and Mrs. John B. Schoeffel in their yacht, the Presit.

Prominent among the San Francisco people arriving on the North Shore this week are the Sam Hubbards, who are to spend the balance of the Summer with their daughter, Mrs. William D. Swan of Cambridge. The Swans are occupying one of the Masconomo cottages, near Singing Beach. Mrs. Swan's brother, Sam Hubbard, Jr., arrived yesterday for the week-end.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hill of New York, who are occupying the Blake residence at West Manchester this season, are entertaining their daughter, Mrs. Herman Leroy Edgar, Mr. Edgar and Master William Edgar, who have just come on from Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., for a few weeks' visit.

Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Goodrich left West Manchester the first of the week for a short visit with the former's mother, Mrs. J. B. Goodrich, in the Berkshires.

Mrs. L. M. Sargent of Boston has been spending the week in Manchester, a guest of her father, Hon. T. Jefferson Coolidge.

T. Dennie Boardman is spending a fortnight with friends in Saratoga, N. Y.

The pretty young Baroness Elizabeth de Rosen, daughter of the Russian Ambassador, is quickly becoming Americanized, and is adopting the ways of the American girls. Tennis is her most favored sport and she may be seen on the courts at her home almost every day. Her mother has just bought a little Irish terrier for her daughter—a prize winner at Boston, New York and Philadelphia shows, and she is expected to show it this Winter in some of the shows.

Scituate

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wade of Roxbury are visiting Mr. Wade's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Wade.

The Girls' Club of the Unitarian Church is to give an invitation dance in the Town Hall Wednesday evening. The following week the sewing circle of the Church will give a lawn party in the afternoon, which will be followed by a dance in the evening.

Mrs. Abigail Miller of Philadelphia has returned home after a pleasant visit with her nephew, Eben Cook of North Scituate.

Miss Eva Dalby of Hyde Park has been the guest of her niece, Mr. James Dalby.

Miss Mary Brewster is visiting friends in Hanover.

Wareham

Wareham, Aug. 5.—Captain Joseph C. Kelley and family of Chatham were the guests of J. W. Ellis last week.

Miss Kate Larcher is the guest of S. C. Burgess.

Wilkins, child and maid, Newton Centre.

Mrs. Briggs of Boston has been the guest of Dr. and Mrs. G. L. Wentz at East Gloucester.

Miss Virginia Hall of Cambridge has arrived at Annisquam for the remainder of the season.

Miss Laura Chard of Chelsea is at Annisquam.

Nahant

Nahant, Aug. 5.—Tennis has been the all absorbing attraction of the past week among the smart set and the courts at the Nahant Club have been swarmed with members of the Summer colony to witness the matches. There was much disappointment owing to the failure of the crack American players to return to the States from London in time to enter the local matches.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Wrenn are expected here next week for the balance of the Summer as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred S. Dabney, parents of Mrs. Wrenn.

Commodore John Foster of Baltimore, who is the head of the Nahant Dory Club, [illegible] won over the fastest boats here last week. The "Sprite," owned by Arthur S. Johnson, president of the Boston Y. M. C. A., [illegible] the two boats may be arranged.

Frank P. Bennett of Saugus acted as host to a large number of his Essex County friends this last week at a banquet at the Relay House.

Swampscott

Swampscott, Aug. 5.—Horseback riding has been the principal feature of diversion among the Summer colony this week, and many smart equestrians have been noticed enjoying the cool rides along the shore roads. Among those who have been seen daily taking a ride in the saddle the past week were Miss Julia Lewanger of Boston, who makes a most pleasing figure in the saddle; Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Stockpole and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Davis, also of Boston.

Bathing parties have been very numerous, and tennis has come in for its share as a pastime. The Misses Mabel and A. Vose of Boston, who left the past week for a stay at the Mountains, were among those to participate in the tennis matches. Granton Hall Dowse and Woodworth James [illegible] of the Hub, have played a [illegible].

Among the [illegible] Summer people to [illegible] this resort for the [illegible] of the Season are Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. [illegible] party entertained as their guests at the Ocean House this week Miss Elsie Mil[illegible], Miss Grace Baldwin and Miss Anne W[illegible] of Boston, and Edward Eaton, H. Eaton and Charles B. Hunt of Philadelphia.

The smart set turned out in large numbers last Tuesday night at the entertainment and bridge whist at the Andrew Preston mansion on Atlantic avenue. The [illegible] was for the benefit of a [illegible] hospital in Boston. A similar benefit was held at the Ocean House on Thursday evening and another good sum was realized.

Captain Mason Fuller, U. S. N., gave an illustrated lecture on the Panama canal zone at the Ocean House Tuesday evening and interested a large audience. His pictures were excellent and the Captain proved a fine entertainer.

The Swifts from Chicago have been visiting here. In their party were Mrs. George T. Swift, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert L. Swift, Miss Mary Swift, Miss Ruth Joselyn and George H. Swift.

Among the Bostonians to join the Summer colony here the past week included Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Crapp, Mr. and Mrs. Wi[illegible] Moseman, Miss Marguerite Moseman, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Richards, Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Williams, Master Jeremiah Williams, Mrs. Louis Jay Wornack.

Among the more prominent guests to register at the Ocean House are Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Bourne of Cleveland. Mr. Bourne was a friend of the late Mark Hanna, and associated with him in many business interests.

Mrs. L. D. Apsley, Mrs. Elmer A. Lord and Mrs. E. A. Merrill were patronesses at the Floating Hospital benefit at the Ocean House last Wednesday evening. Bridge whist was played.

The Edith A., one of the smartest schooners anchored at this resort, took out for a cruise the past week a party which included Mrs. L. D. Apsley, Mrs. Black, Dr. and Mrs. J. Grant Lyman, Mr. and Mrs. Luther G. Brown and Miss Brown.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Pepper of historic Concord were guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Raymond at the Ocean House last week.

Hon. R. O. Richards, justice of the Supreme Court of Ohio, and his family are among the latest arrivals.

The recently completed Summer residence of Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Kimball on Atlantic avenue, near Phillips Beach, is one of the finest in point of architecture along the North Shore.

Mr. and Mrs. James T. Phelps have entertained a number of friends at the pretty residence, the "Brightside," the past week. Mrs. Phelps is a most gracious hostess, and is one of the most popular members of the Summer contingent.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Bond have as recent guests Professor and Mrs. [illegible]man S. Hering of Boston and Mr. [illegible] Mrs. William C. Poillon of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur S. Balch and family of Brookline have opened their Summer cottage on Woodbine avenue. They are planning to entertain a large number of friends.

The Summer colony was entertained Thursday night by a concert at the Ocean House, at which Miss Agnes Green of New York gave a song recital.

Mrs. George B. Sargent and Mrs. Paul R. Clay of Lawrence are late arrivals at the Ocean House.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Hooper of Baltimore have joined the Summer folk at this resort for the month of August.

Miss Lorena Thompson and Mrs. Franklin F. Marsh of Worcester are spending a few weeks here.

Chatham

Chatham, Aug. 5.—The Summer guests still continue to increase and with the arrivals of Old Home Week guests, the town is very lively.

The observance of Old Home Week began last Sunday with union services in the Methodist Church at 11 a. m. A sacred concert was given in the evening. A clambake and picnic was held Wednesday near Mill Pond, with music by Professor Ferguson's orchestra of Bridgewater, and a social ball was given in the town hall in the evening. Thursday was observed as ending day. Friday afternoon there was a reunion of the High School Associations, held in the High School building. In the evening a concert was given in the Masonic Lodge room.

Mr. Stephen F. Hinkley of Providence is with his aunt, Mrs. Lizzie B. Patterson.

Mr. George W. Folger and family of Keene, N. H., are guests of Mrs. Folger and son on Main street.

The life savers went on duty at 12 o'clock Monday night.

Rev. George W. Kent and Victor Frazee of Providence are camping at Minister's Point, North Chatham, where Rev. Mr. Wilson and family of Lexington are also spending the Summer.

Mattapoisett

Mattapoisett, Aug. 5.—This has been a busy week at Mattapoisett. The Casino has been the centre of attraction, the tennis courts daily being crowded with enthusiastic devotees of the game, practising for the tournaments which commence Monday, August 14.

The report of the marriage of Mary Jane Randall, probably the richest woman of this town, to Charles T. Dexter, her second cousin, created a sensation among the Summer visitors. The subsequent denial of any marriage by the involved parties lent an air of mystery to the matter and speculation is rife as to whether Miss Randall is wedded or not.

The Reservation Golf Club announces its list of fixtures for the season. The events are open only to subscribers and include handicaps, foursomes and bogeys. July 29 is the date set for the opening of the competitions and early in September, the "Barstow" challenge cup will be competed for.

Judge L. LeBaron Holmes entertained thirty-two guests at a clambake on the grounds of his residence last Friday.

The recent arrivals have been numerous and include Mr. and Mrs. Fred L. Hammond, Middlesboro; Miss Marion J. Newman, New York; Frank Abbott, Boston; John W. Kelley, Providence.

Mr. and Mrs. W. N. Potter are spending the Summer with A. F. Blanchard on Main street.

J. Langdon Ward of New York arrived in his cutter, the Suona, this week and paid a short visit to his sister, Mrs. J. Newman Jackson.

Coming Weddings and Announced Engagements Put Society in Boston on Qui Vive

Advent of August Sees Social Season at Its Height and With Brilliant Functions to Follow

WITH weddings and rumors of weddings, with the added prestige of titled foreigners for inspiration, and with the exhilarating effects of ideal weather and a growing [illegible] for moonlight motoring, the social [outlook] for the coming weeks is one of [unparalleled] brilliancy.

The peace which up to now has reigned [in the] social realm has proved but the [illegible] the wild phantasy to [illegible] [illegible] radiant and ready to plunge into [the] whirl of smart events, the devotees of fashion and pleasure are [illegible] and expectant for a season which [promises] to be one gay ripple of social [content] and peace, whatever it may [be] at Portsmouth, in smart society will be the same old search and cry [for] peace—peace where there is no peace.

[Socially] the event of Tuesday was the [illegible] informal and much postponed [wedding] of Miss Anna Elizabeth Storrs, daughter of Rev. Leonard K. Storrs, D. D., [of] Brookline, to the handsome Englishman, Captain Edward Parker Bedwell, who has [been] stationed in India for some time. Miss Storrs was gowned in a beautiful robe of white satin and rich lace. Her veil was caught up with orange blossoms and she carried an ivorybound prayer book. As the rectory is next door to the church the [bride] dispensed with the services of a carriage and walked along the flagged sidewalk, accompanied by her father in cassock and surplice. He also walked with his daughter up the aisle as the surpliced choir sang the wedding music from "Lohengrin." At the chancel the bride and her father were met by Captain Bedwell, who was attended by Henry R. Storrs, brother of the bride. The ceremony was impressively performed by Dr. Storrs.

The church was filled with parishioners, as well as numerous friends of the bride from Boston, Cambridge and other places, and among them were several clergymen of the Episcopal communion, intimate friends of the Storrs family. Among those present were Professor and Mrs. Charles S. Sargent, Miss Alice Sargent, Mrs. Guy Lowell, Captain William Humphreys, Mrs. Andrew Robeson, Dean Hodges, Mrs. Desmond Fitzgerald and several members of the Vincent Club.

Miss Storrs was a member of the Vincent Club and well known in Boston and Brookline. She is wealthy, having been a beneficiary in several wills, including those of her mother and grandmother. Rare and beautiful gifts came over from England from friends and relatives of the groom for his bride, but they were not taken out of bond, thus escaping duty, as they return with Capt. and Mrs. Bedwell, who sailed Wednesday for Liverpool, from where they go to Exeter, the captain's post of duty for the present.

Of the dozen or more weddings of Vincent Club girls soon to take place, general interest centres in that of Miss Gladys Lawson, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Lawson, to Eben Blaine Stanwood of Beacon street, a Harvard man, [class] of '99, and highly esteemed member [of] the Puritan and Hasty Pudding Clubs. An October wedding at Dreamwold would [be] the choice of the bride-elect, who celebrated her twenty-second birthday last [illegible]day, when the engagement was formally announced to a gathering of friends at that most beautiful of country homes.

An aristocratic scion of a wealthy house, Mr. Stanwood is democratic and takes pride in being the grandnephew of James G. Blaine, the famous Secretary of State.

Miss Lawson is an expert in out-of-door sports, cultivated, so it is said, for the sake of and through being much with her athletic sweetheart.

Throwing into the shade all the other weddings arranged for September will be that of Miss Mary Head, the elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Head of Beacon street, to Mr. William A. Russell of Commonwealth avenue, a recent graduate of Harvard.

Miss Head was one of the most popular debutantes of a couple of Winters ago, and last Spring was in company with Brenda Fenollosa, another bride-to-be—one of the winsome "little school girls" in the Vincent Club theatricals.

Details for the wedding, which will undoubtedly be brilliant and fashionable in the extreme, are not complete.

Like the Heads, Mr. Russell has a beautiful country home on the shore of Lake Champlain, and it was there that the pretty romance developed. Miss Margaret Head, one of last season's most beautiful debutantes, will probably serve as maid of honor.

Society was pleasantly surprised by the announcement that Mrs. Van Rensselaer, the pretty widow of the wealthy F. Harold Van Rensselaer, was quietly married last Wednesday at St. James's Church, Great Barrington, Mass., to Harold Rogers Woolf of Boston. No formal announcement of the engagement had been made, and Mrs. Van Rensselaer, whose former husband died just two years ago, had given her friends no hint of her coming marriage. Mr. Woolf has made his home in New York for the last few years.

Among the most promising buds to blossom forth into the social world this coming Winter will be Miss Helen Thomas, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Washington B. Thomas of Gloucester street, for whom many pleasant things will be done. Miss Thomas, with her parents and sister, returned from abroad last month, and have since been at their Prides Crossing country home. Miss Thomas is petite, has much personality and is very pleasing. She has been most carefully educated, and is an excellent linguist, but her particular accomplishments are riding and driving, which she understands to perfection. Mrs. Thomas, who was formerly Caroline Wadleigh, is a handsome woman of the English type and Mr. Thomas is identified with every club of prominence in town, from the Somerset Club down.

A postponed debut will be that of Miss Rosamond Dixey, whose "coming out" this Winter is naturally withdrawn from the list owing to the death of her only brother, Arthur Sturgis Dixey, which occurred recently in Seoul. Miss Dixey was a devoted and fond sister, and she and her brother shared many tastes and enjoyed the same pastimes. Everyone is expressing the utmost sympathy for her, and the regret at Lenox is especially keen, for the young people had been leaders in their set for several years, and inaugurated the "paper chases," which were quite the feature of last Summer's social programme, and which were held at the beautiful country home of the Dixeys, "Tanglewood."

That Priscilla finally lured John to the point of speaking for himself is due the large and distinguished gathering of "The Alden Kindred of America" planning to meet in Faneuil Hall next Wednesday for an all-day session, including social festivities. The Aldens are living illustrations of the Rooseveltian theory, and there are several hundred members of the unique organization, and names widely known are represented in the membership, including those of the Hon. George D. Alden of New York, Gamaliel Bradford, John F. Simmons of Boston, the Rev. W. H. Alden of Philadelphia, George W. Alden of Brockton and Mrs. O'Donoghue (Marion Longfellow), formerly of Washington, now of this city, who will speak upon "Our Birthright."

Mrs. O'Donoghue is a niece of the late poet and therefore a cousin of Miss Alice Longfellow of Cambridge. Her pen name is "Miriam Lester."

Private letters from London say that Mrs. Arthur Paget will probably have to have her knee broken again before she can walk, if she ever walks at all. Mrs. Paget, who was Minnie Stevens of Boston, and who was injured in an elevator accident in her London home, is rated by [society] as one of the most charming and beautiful women in England. Among her staunch friends and admirers are King Edward and Queen Alexandra, the King declaring, on her recent reappearance, that she had grown lovelier and younger, and the Queen, that she is the pluckiest woman she ever heard of—for not content with being out and about once more, and because she still continues to limp, she will submit to another trying operation with the hope of improving her condition.

Miss Sally Thayer of Boston, Nathaniel Thayer's third daughter, is making one of the biggest successes in the younger set at Newport this Summer. She is distinctly pretty, and is the most attractive of the three girls, whose late mother was a Baltimore heiress. She is fond of social life and is quite the opposite in every way of her sister Cornelia, who came out several seasons ago, and who has always devoted herself to philanthropic work. Miss Sally Thayer has the only dark coloring in the family, and in this as otherwise she is a striking contrast to the others.

She is most winning and vivacious, and seems to have decided that it is quite time that Boston should come in for a larger share of social notice at Newport, as of late years there has been little to distinguish it there.

With Mrs. Reginald C. Vanderbilt transformed into a milkmaid and presiding over a rustic dairy with a corps of pretty assistants—including Boston girls—as one of its beguiling features, the lawn fete to be given on Aug. 12 at Rough Point, the Frederick W. Vanderbilt villa, in aid of the tuberculosis camp, continues to engage the attention of society.

Although it is the fag end of the London season Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton's "Fridays," which she simply transplants from Boston to London, continue to be most brilliant. A recent gathering included Archdeacon and Mrs. Wilberforce, Lady Wynford, Anthony Hope, Mrs. Meynell, Violet Hunt, Richard Pryce, "Michael Field," and Mr. Crisp, whose picture is the big success in this year's Academy, besides many others in the world of art and letters.

Professor Oliver M. W. Sprague of Harvard University has accepted a professorship of economics at the Imperial University in Tokio, Japan. With his wife he will start for that country in about a month.

Baron Gustavo Tosti, the new Italian consul in Boston, was formally welcomed and enthusiastically received at a banquet given in his honor Wednesday night at the Quincy House by the St. Raphael Society, an organization of his own countrymen. Among the guests who attended the reception and banquet were Dr. Gambardella, Richard Earle, and J. Houghton. There were also present F. Leveroni, S. Pesola, A. Cassassa, G. B. Biggi, J. Carcappo, A. A. Balzarano, Louis Biggi, F. Bonzagni, Miss Quinn, Miss A. Carretor, [illegible] Botto, M. Leveroni, G. Ferretti, [illegible] Maggi, P. Di Stasio, G. Sartori, [illegible], A. Cenni, A. J. Granara, B. A. [illegible], Miss Katherine Conway, the Rev. Fr. Doudy, Dr. G. M. Balboni, Mr. Renison, J. Ferrarini and James V. Donnaruma, editor of the Gazetta del Massachusetts.

Mrs. Mary E. Duddy, of Somerville, and her attractive daughter, Miss Nettie M. Duddy, left Thursday for an extended visit to Philadelphia, where they intend to remain until the early part of September. They intend to pass a few days in New York and Atlantic City before returning.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Amory of Marlboro street, with Miss Ethel Amory and Mr. Ingersoll Amory have opened their cottage at Beverly Farms for the remainder of the Summer. The Amorys are devoted to yachting and will spend much of their time on their boat, "The Turtle."

Miss Alice Draper Colburn, who has been spending the season with her relatives, the Drapers, at Hopedale, will shortly return to Europe, where she has resided for the past few years with her mother.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Warren Merrill, who for the past two months have been travelling abroad, arrived the past week in town, and will doubtless pass the remainder of the season at their country home, "Rockhurst," at Manchester-by-the-Sea.

Mr. and Mrs. William L. Radcliffe of Jamaica Plain will leave early this month for an extended tour of Canada, including visits to Montreal, Toronto and a lengthy stay at the picturesque Chateau Frontenac, in Quebec. The Radcliffes will return late in September.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Cabot of Commonwealth avenue and their daughter, Miss Elizabeth Cabot, are passing the month of August at the Dark Harbor House, Islesboro. Miss Cabot is prominently identified with the fashionable Vincent Club, and is also a chum of Dorothy Forbes, who is also summering at Islesboro.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Rollins Morse of Newport are paying a visit to Dr. and Mrs. A. Lawrence Mason of Clarendon street at York Harbor, Me.

Dr. Charles Goddard Weld of Brookline cruised from Newport to Bar Harbor on his steam yacht Malay, and will remain a few weeks cruising along the coast, making Bar Harbor his headquarters.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kidder are registered for a few weeks at the St. Sauveur, Bar Harbor.

Miss Madeline Mixter of Marlboro street is pleasantly established at her Summer home at Nantucket.

Mr. Edgar Harding of Beacon street and Woods Hole has been cruising on his yacht Hoosier, putting in at Newport and New London for a few days.

Mr. Leonard Ahl of Pride's Crossing, who recently returned from abroad, where he was touring the continent in his automobile with his mother, Mrs. Daniel Ahl, has gone on a brief trip to Colorado.

Mr. and Mrs. John R. Livermore are paying a visit to Mrs. Livermore's parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. Mortimer Brooks, at their beautiful Summer home at Newport.

Mrs. Samuel A. B. Abbott of Rome and formerly of Boston is being entertained by Mrs. Daniel B. Fearing at her Newport residence.

Mrs. Charles Blake and her son, Mr. William Osborne Blake, who have been touring England and Scotland in their automobile, are among the latest guests to register at the Savoy in London. The Blakes will return for the late Summer at their beautiful country home at Hingham.

Mrs. Francis Webster Goss and her daughter, Miss Marian Goss, are dispensing hospitality at their picturesque cottage at Campobello. Miss Goss is the acknowledged leader in the young set, and is giving a number of informal affairs, which are eminently successful.

Mrs. Jere Abbott of Beacon street and her sister, Miss Lily Bangs, who have been travelling through the British Isles, have gone to the continent, where they will pass the coming months, returning to Boston early in October.

Miss Elizabeth Tuckerman has been the recent guest of her friend, Miss Watson, at her beautiful Summer home on Clark's Island in Plymouth Harbor.

The engagement is announced of Miss May Albertina Steverman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clement C. Steverman of Bowker street, Brookline, to Mr. Walter E. Murphy of Brookline.

Dr. and Mrs. Richard Cranch Greenleaf have as their guest Miss Constance Bacon at their beautiful Summer home at Lenox. Miss Bacon, one of last Winter's debutantes, is a very attractive and popular young lady, and was one of the four bridesmaids at the recent wedding of Mr. "Jack" Parkinson and Miss Polly Emmons.

Mrs. Charles W. Seabury of Marlboro street and her daughter, Miss Elizabeth Seabury, are among the more recent arrivals at the fashionable Woodstock Inn, Woodstock, Vt.

Mr. & Mrs. William M. Scott of Newbury street and their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. George F. Baldwin of Chicago, are pleasantly established in their favorite apartments at the Mount Washington for the remainder of the season.

MRS. HENRY D. TUDOR, ONE OF THE MANY YOUNG BRIDES IN SOCIETY

Taken in the costume in which she made great hit in the Vincent Club theatricals shortly before her marriage.

She Is Now Enjoying Her Honeymoon but Will Take Up New Social Duties in the Fall.

When next season's social life opens among the many brides of the Summer who will enter upon a social career as young matrons none will be more popular than Mrs. Henry D. Tudor, who as Eleanor Gray has been a reigning beauty ever since her debut, and who by many is considered the prettiest of the June brides.

Mrs. Tudor is tall and fair and most distinguished in appearance.

She was a member of the Vincent Club, and, as the handsome princess in "Aladdin" two years ago, she made a tremendous hit, both by her appearance and her acting.

The wedding, which took place at Trinity Church, was a most brilliant affair, and the reception which followed at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Chipman Gray of Beacon street, was a decidedly jolly though informal affair.

Lexington

TIRED, NERVOUS MOTHERS

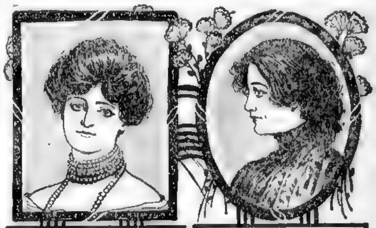
Make Unhappy Homes—Their Condition Irritate Both Husband and Children—How Thousands of Mothers Have Been Saved From Nervous Prostration and Made Strong and Well.



Mrs. Chester Curry — Mrs. Chas. F. Brown

A nervous, irritable mother, often on the verge of hysterics, is unfit to care for children; it ruins a child's disposition and reacts upon herself. The trouble between children and their mothers too often is due to the fact that the mother has some female weakness, and she is entirely unfit to bear the strain upon her nerves that governing children involves; it is impossible for her to do anything calmly.

The ills of women act like a firebrand upon the nerves, consequently nine-tenths of the nervous prostration, nervous despondency, "the blues," sleeplessness and nervous irritability of women arise from some derangement of the female organism.

Do you experience fits of depression with restlessness, alternating with extreme irritability? Are your spirits easily affected, so that one minute you laugh, and the next minute you feel like crying?

Do you feel something like a ball rising in your throat and threatening to choke you; all the senses perverted, morbidly sensitive to light and sound; pain in the ovaries, and especially between the shoulders; bearing down pains, nervous dyspepsia, and almost continually cross and snappy?

If so, your nerves are in a shattered condition, and you are threatened with nervous prostration.

Proof is monumental that nothing in the world is better for nervous prostration than Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; thousands and thousands of women testify to this fact.

Mrs. Chester Curry, Leader of the Ladies' Symphony Orchestra, 42 Saratoga St., East Boston, Mass., writes.

[illegible]

Mrs. Charles F. Brown, Vice-President of the Mothers' Club, 21 Cedar Terrace, Hot Springs, Ark., writes.

POEMS TO THE SHAH WILL FILL A LIBRARY

Special Cable to Sunday American.
Paris, Aug. 5. The Shah receives a huge amount of correspondence every day, on which a staff of secretaries are engaged, but which if they were dealt with in the exhaustive manner in which the writers would like, a staff of amanuenses ten times the number would be required. The requests addressed to His Majesty number hundreds a day, and are often of a most curious description.

Sometimes a father who finds it difficult to get his daughter off his hands writes the Shah suggesting that if he will help him all his daughter's children shall be named after His Majesty. Sometimes an artist offers one of his works to the 'King of Kings' and asks in exchange a little villa at St. Cloud. Or an inventor requests a small loan. The poems addressed to His Majesty would fill a library.

The Less We Wear the More We Can Eat, Medical Men Now Tell Us.

Special Cable to Boston American.
London, Aug. 5. A medical journal is responsible for the important discovery that "the less we wear the more we can eat."

This mysterious affinity between dress and diet is taken very seriously by medical men.

Why should the idea seem absurd?" asked a Harley street physician. "It is only common sense.

"Any one who has the most elementary knowledge of hygiene and the functions of the human body should know that the wearing of too many clothes is not conducive to a good appetite. The wearer is worn out with the weight of his clothing, the pores of the skin are clogged, the organs of digestion refuse to perform their work properly, and food ceases to tempt him.

"White is the best of all colors to wear on a hot day if you want to be able to eat heartily. Green, pale green and yellow materials of open texture run it very close. me such a lot about, or the ruins and temples of Greece. No; I'm afraid they aren't much in my line, Vaughan. I'm not educated up to 'em yet. I suppose in time I shall get to know the difference between [illegible]

So [illegible] Hotel de Louvre [illegible] the original intention had plan had been to make only a day and a night's stop in Marseilles.

They started off by seeing the "sights," but George very soon got tired of going round with a guide. Paris had materially checked his first ardor for sightseeing.

"Get rid of the fellow," he said to Vaughan in that incisive, impetuous manner which he had only quite recently adopted. "I'm tired of him and of places of interest. We can manage very well by ourselves, and besides, I like watching the people. People interest me more than altar pieces in stuffy, stagey-looking churches. What do you say?"

Vaughan [illegible] to say beyond agreeing with his pupil and chance, though in his heart of hearts he was beginning to fear that [illegible] other extreme, and that, from a purely educational point of view, this European tour they were taking might be a failure in more ways than one, if he insisted on seeing nothing [illegible] And that was [illegible] intention.

He was never so happy as when he sat in a music hall or circus, with a large beer [illegible] cigar, or at a cafe, where he could sit for hours, philosophically watching the cosmopolitan throng around him, and passing audible remarks

[illegible] that's what's the matter with me."

"Lonely!" exclaimed Vaughan. "Why, my dear man, I'm never away from your side."

"Humph! I sometimes wish you were," said George, with a lugubrious laugh. "No, I wasn't thinking of you. You see, you don't count, quite."

[illegible] on, "would be just to hand over everything [illegible] who would enjoy it, marry Bella and get one of those shows that fellow Selwyn or Braine used to talk about."

Finding a Friend.

"Impossible and out of the question," said Vaughan firmly.

"I suppose it is," George answered, with a lugubrious smile. "But I'd bet you not one of all these people I've been spending money on and entertaining lately would know me then—not one, and that's the test. And that's what gets on my nerves, Vaughan."

"I am quite sure you are wrong about that, Holland," returned Vaughan. "You do us all a great injustice. We are not all such cads. I dare say there are some who only run after you for what they can get out of you. You'll find that class of [illegible] Circus, I have no doubt."

"Maybe," admitted George—"maybe. Anyhow, you know 'em there, and here you don't."

"[illegible] instance," said Vaughan, "take [illegible]"

"Oh, you're paid, like the rest!" replied George bluntly.

"But at the same time," said the other, "I assure you that if you were a pauper [illegible] proud to have the honor of your acquaintance. I speak now as man to man, Holland. I like you. I like to feel that you were my friend. [illegible] that I am [illegible]"

George sat bolt upright and stared at [illegible]

[illegible] said sharply.

[illegible] like you, Vaughan."

CHAPTER CXLII.

A Face in a Crowd.

FROM that time the two strangely different men became closer friends, and something sprang up between them which placed them on quite a different footing.

They sat and talked and smoked at the cafe till long past midnight. They spoke [illegible] variety of things and at length drifted on to a topic which was forever cropping up in any conversation with Stephen Holland. It was the still unexplained mystery of the murder of the false Stephen Holland.

"Will they ever do anything?" asked George angrily, after Vaughan had been apostrophizing the State police in no very complimentary terms.

"It looks very much now," said Vaughan, "that the Holland murder will go down to posterity in that tremendously long list of undiscovered crimes and unsolved mysteries."

"It's an infernal shame!" said George, angrily; "and I've done all I jolly well could to help 'em! You know I had hopes of Braine——"

"What's Braine got to do with it?" asked Vaughan, sharply.

"Oh, Braine's got something to do with everything, as far as I can make out. Anyhow, Braine promised to do all he could——"

"But I never heard of such a thing!" interrupted Vaughan. "Gerrard has the case. It is the State police case. Surely you don't want a blackmailing scoundrel like that meddling in affairs of such vital importance!"

"Gerrard," answered George, "is an incapable ass. Braine is, as far as I can make out, a very clever man."

"He is that," agreed Vaughan.

"Therefore," said George, "I don't see why, if he wants to, he shouldn't have a [illegible]"

"But what [illegible] you told him that you [illegible]"

[illegible] Karoff and well [illegible]

But Vaughan was inquisitive.

"What has Karl Karoff got to do with [illegible]"

"Personally," said George, "I don't think he had anything to do with it."

"Of course," said Vaughan, thoughtfully, "there's no doubt about his being the man who killed your father, the late judge."

Vaughan is Curious.

"I don't for a minute believe it," stoutly affirmed George; "and I know what I'm [illegible] My mother would never have [illegible] to shield him if he had not been innocent."

"When did your mother help to shield Karl Karoff?" asked Vaughan eagerly.

George's teeth shut. He shook his head.

"We don't want to talk about [illegible]" he answered firmly. "That's a [illegible] and done with."

But [illegible] very interested. Vaughan [illegible]

"You know all there is to know," answered George. "If you remember the affair of last Christmas night, you will know to what I refer."

"Oh! So it was then? Of course, I remember. So our friend Fergus Braine associates that business with [illegible]"

"I prefer, if you have no objection," interrupted George, "not to discuss the matter. It is not, and never was, my affair."

"Good heavens, then, whose affair was it?"

"The affair of a man who is dead and my mother."

"Whew!"

Vaughan looked even graver. Personally he was not more particularly interested in the two astonishing and mysterious crimes which had thrilled the world during the past nine months than the ordinary man in the street, and he knew very little more about the details. He had read the newspapers and discussed the evidence and theories of press and police and public with acquaintances, but that was about all. It was not until, through Mr. B[illegible]heim, the Holland solicitor, he came into such close contact with the family that he gave the cases any close study.

PEACE ENVOYS PRESENTED BY ROOSEVELT; NOW OFF TO PORTSMOUTH

$3349 ROBBERY IN PUBLIC GARDEN.

Confidence Men Get Savings of a Lifetime from Hard-Working Tailor Who Listened to Their Scheme for Wealth

DREW MONEY FROM BANK, THEY STEAL IT

Theft Perpetrated on Friday Was Not Discovered Until Yesterday—Police Now in Hunt for the Slick Crooks

Benjamin Vener, a tailor of No. 107 Warrenton street, was robbed of $3,349, the savings of a life time, in the Public Garden late Friday afternoon. He only discovered it yesterday. Two clever men, chance acquaintances, known vaguely as "Jake" and "Bornstein," are believed to have stolen the money. Vener has reported the matter to the police and tells a simple little story of how it happened.

It seems that a couple of weeks ago Vener met these two men. They were very enterprising, bustling sort of people. Immediately after he met them they began to talk about Boston's need of another department store. They had the scheme. Vener had some money in the Boston Five Cent Savings Bank.

No one requested him to draw this money out, but the opportunity he would have to join the new firm if he did so was dangled before his eyes. He finally drew it out. They had visited him at his home several times. He trusted them implicitly.

On Friday afternoon last they went with him to the bank, where he took out $3,084, all the money he had there. He had $265 on his person. From the bank the three proceeded to the Public Garden, where they sat on a bench, Vener in the centre, to reach final conclusions.

Then it was that the thieves extracted the wallet. Vener went home, and, upon awakening yesterday was shocked to find the money missing. He reported the matter to the police at the Lagrange street station.

The two men are known to Vener only by the names "Jake" and "Bornstein." The former is described as being about [illegible] years old, dark curly hair, dark eyes, gold filled teeth, and black mustache, and the latter as about thirty-five years old, dark hair, medium complexion, and red birth marks on the corner of the mouth.

President's Toast a Prayer for Peace.

At the luncheon to the representatives of Japan and Russia on board the Mayflower yesterday, President Roosevelt proposed the following toast:

"Gentlemen—I propose a toast to which there will be no answer and to which I ask you to drink in silence, standing. I drink to the welfare and prosperity of the two sovereigns and peoples of the two great nations whose representatives have met one another on this ship.

"It is my most earnest hope and prayer, in the interests of not only those two great powers, but of all mankind, that a just and lasting peace may speedily be concluded between them."

Strict Formality Observed In Introduction, by Head of the Republic, of Representatives of the Czar and the Mikado

SALUTES WAKE ECHOES OVER OYSTER BAY

Significance of Great Event Impresses Itself Upon All Present, but Greetings Were Apparently Most Hearty

By KARL DECKER.

New York, Aug. 5.—Crashing guns, echoing in continued reverberations from the hills of Oyster Bay, marked the formal meeting to-day of the peace envoys of Russia and Japan in the presence of President Roosevelt on board the Mayflower.

From the white sides of the United States cruisers flashed out the red flare of the saluting charge, followed by the wispy clouds of gray smoke that floated out across the water like great banners, as the men selected as peace commissioners by the warring nations went over the side of the President's yacht and were brought together for the first time since their arrival in this country.

The deep significance of the day's incident was not obscured or demeaned by lack of national ceremony. The affair was made strikingly impressive and the gathering in formal convention, for the first time, of the peace commissioners, was given its full importance, as far as the outward show was concerned.

STRICTEST OF FORMALITY.

"The actual meeting was none the less formal, although it had been intended to evade some strangely difficult matters of precedence by an air of informality. It was decided later that the questions of precedence were of less imporance than the preservation of a strict formality throughout, and instead of the buffet lunch which had been arranged, the envoys gathered about the table in the mess room [of t]he Mayflower with all the pretense of a White House affair.

[Pres]ident Roosevelt was clearly [illegible]s of the seriousness of the [illegible] of the envoys, and his one ob[ject] [wa]s to bring these men together [illegible] restraint and as much of [illegible] as possible. This he ac[complished] [illegible]

The incidents on board the Mayflower were few and simple, in order to avoid complications of any sort, and the most significant occurrence of the day was the toast of President Roosevelt. It was at the conclusion of the luncheon that President Roose-

RACING HORSES IN COLLISION; RUN INTO CROWD.

Drivers Hurt and Spectators Endangered at Franklin Speedway by Accident at Finish of Class A Trot

Two drivers were badly injured and hundreds of spectators were thrown into the wildest excitement at the weekly matinee of the Dorchester Gentlemen's Driving Club at Franklin Speedway yesterday afternoon, when Lady Madison and La Gazelle, two horses in the Class A trot, became entangled, threw the drivers to the ground and crashed through the crowd on to Blue Hill avenue.

P. J. Fitzgerald, driving Lady Madison, and F. O. [illegible] driving La Gazelle, are at their homes suffering with severe cuts and bruises on the face and body, after being trampled on and dragged several yards by the horses.

The racers were flying down the home stretch, with La Gazelle in the lead. The horse suddenly shied and became unmanageable. Driver [illegible] pluckily hung onto the ribbons after being thrown to the ground until Lady Madison crashed into the La Gazelle sulky, when he let go the reins.

The two trotters ran from the speedway into the crowd of spectators. Pedestrians barely escaped by dodging the infuriated horses as they tore down the avenue. Mounted Sergeant Guard and Mounted Patrolman Patrick Williams chased the horses for a mile and brought them to a halt.

The two drivers were cut and bruised, and were taken to their homes.

ANOTHER CONCERT FOR CHARLESTOWN

Although it was announced that the Music Department of the City of Boston would give no more Municipal Band concerts in the Charlestown district because of rowdyism displayed at the last concert, when musicians were hit by missiles, another concert will be given on the evening of August 13 at Hayes Square. The Charlestown Improvement Association was instrumental in bringing about the decision to give another trial.

SAYS SCHIDLOFSKI HAS NEW TALE OF MURDER.

Counsel for Confessed Wife Slayer Harbors Secret Confided to Him by Prisoner, Regains Deserted Courage

John Schidlofski, confessed wife murderer, is to have a chance to plead to the indictment returned against him by the June grand jury within a week.

Schidlofski will then ask the Court to assign John W. McAnarney as his counsel. He will tell the Court that he is without means to provide counsel.

It will be several months before Schidlofski is brought to trial on the charge of killing his wife.

District Attorney George A. Sanderson will represent the State at the trial.

Mr. McAnarney says that he feels confident that Schidlofski has a much better than a fighting chance for less than first degree verdict. He says that the story that is told by Schidlofski is interesting. He declines to tell just what it is.

In Cambridge jail Schidlofski has recovered considerable of the courage he lost on his trip from La Junta, where he was arrested through the work of the BOSTON AMERICAN.

DROWNED TRYING TO SAVE BOY'S LIFE

Northampton, Aug. 5.—Charles R. Thayer, of Hatfield, was drowned in the Connecticut river this evening, while trying to save the life of a companion. Search for the body was abandoned for this evening, but will be resumed to-morrow.

Thayer with F. R. Smith and the latter's son, Eddie, went canoeing. The canoe capsized. Thayer seized the boy and started to swim ashore while Smith clung to the boat. When near shore Thayer was seized with cramps. He let go the boy before sinking. The boy reached shore safely.

PEACE PRAYER AT RESIDENT'S TOAST.

Roosevelt, in Presence of the Plenipotentiaries of Japan and Russia, Expresses Hope That Envoys Will End War

HISTORIC MEETING ON BOARD MAYFLOWER

Representatives of Belligerent Powers Received by Chief Executive in Ceremony That Long Will Be Remembered

Oyster Bay, Aug. 5.—President Roosevelt proposed the following toast:

THE PRESIDENT'S TOAST.

"Gentlemen—I propose a toast to which there will be no answer and which I ask you to drink in silence. I drink to the welfare and prosperity of the sovereigns and the peoples of the two great nations whose representatives have met on this ship. It is my most earnest hope and prayer in the interest, not only of these two great powers, but of all civilized mankind, that a just and lasting peace may speedily be reconciled between them."

The serious note struck by this toast found instant response in the hearts of the envoys of the two nations which have been so bitterly fighting the greatest war of many decades. It brought home to them the world wide desire for an end to the strife that has cost both nations the lives of hundreds of thousands of their best in manhood, and made them understand that their conflict is not a matter in which they alone are interested.

INCIDENT MAKES HISTORY.

To all there came the realization that the incident was one which would live long in history, no matter what the out come might be. It would give the quiet, insignificant little village on the north coast of Long Island an importance equal to that of many great cities when history shall be written, and the fact that from half around the world the representatives of two of the greatest nations traveled to meet in the quiet little harbor will mean more to historians and to students of great national questions than it ever will to the people of the place.

Those in Oyster Bay who took any interest in the meeting of the peace envoys began to gather at the docks on the bay shortly after noon. By this time Oyster Bay was looking more imposing than ever before in its history. Several yachts from New York had steamed in during the morning, and scores of small sail craft drifted about the harbor. All the boats of the Sewanhaka Yacht Club were out early, and the arrival of a heavy sea going tug from New York bearing the baggage of the envoys added to the liveliness of the scene.

The early morning had dawned through a heavy mist that cleared slowly as the sun burned a way thro gh it and brought out as though on a stage developing photographic plate, the U. S. S. Mayflower lying half a mile off shore. Gradually the Galveston and the Dolphin, which had come in the night before, were developed from the mist in the same manner, and within an hour the bay lay smiling and serene under a typical August day.

STAGE SETTING PERFECT.

Oyster Bay has rarely seen a more beautiful or more auspicious day. Light, flaky clouds drifted against a veil of turquoise blue and the water of the little harbor lay as ripples as a sheet of glass. The last setting for one of the world's most significant events was ready.

Yacht flags and the national ensign displayed by boatmen added to the dainty touches of color necessary to the perfect quality of the scene.

There was a narrow opening of the mouth of the harbor the Connecticut shore could be seen, and the low, wooded hills of Centre Island and the hills along Lloyds Neck formed a fine setting for the ground of the picture.

BAY ECHOES WITH SALUTE.

It was shortly after twelve o'clock when the Tacoma, bearing the Japanese envoys, swept through the entrance to the harbor and rounded to a short distance from the Mayflower.

The Tacoma's guests had gone aboard the Mayflower by this time, greeted by the roar of a twenty gun salute. They had been on board but a few minutes when Baron Komura, Minister Takahira and the Japanese party left the Tacoma and were seen across the still water in launches and the swinging arms of the Tacoma's jacks.

As the Japanese party left the companionway they were greeted by the ceremonial salute of the bosun's pipe and again the quiet bay awoke and sent a triple echo back to the envoys of the rising sun.

It was just 12:40 when the Japanese were aboard the Mayflower.

At the head of the companionway they were greeted by Assistant Secretary H. H. D. Peirce of the State Department, and by him they were introduced to the President.

The cabin of the Mayflower was handsomely decorated with flowers in honor of the visit of the envoys, and as the Japanese entered the cabin the band played ceremonial music from the rain saloon. Then the envoys took their places at the table, the same at which Secretary Taft presided at the banquet given in honor of the Filipino party several days ago.

NO FLAG DECORATIONS.

It is a superb navy, however, not unlike a great exhibit, and it was displayed in quantities throughout the ship. On the table in the main saloon it was bedded in great masses of green, but there were no flags, some banners of gold being used through out the other ships.

No flags were used anywhere in the decorations out of a desire to pay due unsentimental affront.

The Japanese remained in the wardroom until the arrival of the Russian party. It was evident that the Russians had crossed out into the harbor and came alongside of the Mayflower within a few minutes, a boat put off from the side of the Chautauqua, and the Russian party was soon swiftly conveyed to the Mayflower. For the third time the guns of the Tacoma in the bay rang out in a salute as M. Witte, Baron Rosen and their party went aboard.

Greetings Were Cordial.

The greetings between the President and the envoys of the Czar were cordial and hearty, and in a few minutes introduction had been made.

For a time the Russian envoys remained on deck. They met the officers of the ship, all of whom were in special dress uniform, as were also Major-general Frederick D. Grant, commander of the Department of the East, and Rear Admiral C. S. Coghlan, commandant of the Brooklyn Navy Yard, who were present respectively as representatives of the army and navy. Rear Admiral Charles D. Sigsbee, commander of the Navy Yard here, and family of the first American admiral, John Paul Jones, coming from France, was also present, but his baggage having not arrived he was not in uniform.

Within a short time the Russian and Japanese envoys gathered in the main saloon of the Mayflower, where was enacted the most impressive international drama of recent years, participated in each other by the President. With an alleviation of ceremonial dignity at least, and an air of well assumed amity and good will, the representatives of the two nations, so long at war with each other, grasped hands and inaugurated a peace conference which must become world famous by matter what its outcome.

And for the first time since the establishment of international diplomacy, an executive of one nation gathered in the main cruiser of the envoys of two warring countries on a mission of peace and had personally superintended the preliminaries of the conference intended to end one of the most disastrous conflicts of history.

HOW ENVOYS MET ON THE MAYFLOWER

Oyster Bay, N. Y., Aug. 5.—President Roosevelt brought the peace envoys of Russia and Japan together this afternoon in the pretty cabin of the Mayflower, saw them shake hands and break bread and rent them off to Portsmouth with a toast for their sovereigns and people and a prayer for the successful issue of their negotiations. If they do not conclude the "just and lasting peace" which he hoped for, it will be no fault of the President's, for today, like every other step he has taken in these delicate proceedings, the arrangements were crowned with absolute success. Everything passed off like clock work, and all was smiles and hearty good will. But, in spite of all the gaiety, there was an undercurrent of belief—now felt more than expressed, that the Portsmouth conference would end in failure. It is certain that the President has the greatest desire for peace resulting from their deliberations, and the unwelcome impression upon the mind of the Russian envoys how necessary they believe their cause and how slim they think their chances of suffering it.

With Hearty Handshakes.

After the introductions of the Japanese party had all been made, the President told Baron Komura and Minister Takahira that he wished to have them visit him again during the present Summer. "Now," said the President, "I want a little informal visit with you, Baron, and you, Mr. Takahira," and with a laugh and wave of the hand, he led them off to the Secretary Winslow's private room, where they waited for five or six minutes.

The Japanese were escorted to another part of the ship while the Russians were finishing up the side. The reception of the Czar's plenipotentiaries was practically a repetition of the first. There were the same salutes, the same hearty handshakes, and after going through this, the President extended the same invitation to Count Witte and Baron Rosen that he had given to Baron Komura and Mr. Takahira.

"It is a great joy to us to have met you," he said, "and I want you to come out to my home again and take lunch with me."

English as the Medium.

The most delicate function of the day, the introduction of the envoys to each other by the President, was performed in less time than it takes to tell it. The Japanese filed in, Count Witte was first in rank, and to Baron Komura, and Mr. Takahira was presented to Baron Rosen, the President using English as the medium.

The introduction was then repeated every Russian gentleman shaking hands with every Japanese gentleman, and all smiled scrapelessly.

Now before we go in to lunch," said the President, "Captain, is lunch ready?" he asked Commander Winslow, Commander Winslow said it was and the President led the way with a wave of his hand to the dining room. Witte dropped in behind him and Baron Komura followed him. The rest straggled in and the general attack on the edibles began.

The President took a sandwich in one hand, a cup of cocoa in the other, and motioned to Count Witte and Baron Komura to follow his example. Then did Count Witte took a seat in one corner of the room. Baron Komura sat down beside him. Then the President moved a chair directly in front of them both, and Baron Rosen and Mr. Takahira took seats side by side, almost touching the right and left hand side, and so the picture was made. Then there was a general handshaking and the Japanese left the ship.

The ship's officers gathered on deck near the head of the gangway, the band played and President Roosevelt and his cousin, Mr. Emlen Roosevelt, left the ship. The Japanese in a few minutes disappeared over the side of the Chautauqua, which is to take them to Portsmouth.

The President's flag was pulled down from the peak and the Russian flag took its place.

PORTSMOUTH READY FOR PEACE ENVOYS

By J. Frank Davis.

The Wentworth, Newcastle, N. H., Aug. 5.—Portsmouth is ready for her fame. On Monday she will become the news centre of the world.

As the sun sank to-night the gates of the Navy Yard were closed to the public. They will not be reopened until Japan and Russia have arranged a peace treaty, or the negotiations have been definitely broken off.

All things are to-night ready for the conference that may end the most deadly war in history and place the name of Portsmouth beside those of Ghent and Amiens as places where have been signed treaties of monumental import.

The second floor of the great new store house in the Navy Yard is now complete y furnished for the convenience of the envoys. In the centre of the building, which has been placed, flanked by massive armored doors, are the rooms which will set the plenipotentiaries and their secretaries, the Japanese on one side and the Russian on the other.

Leading from this room is a private retiring and consulting room for each delegation, although it is not thought these will be much used, as the conferences of each commission are more likely to be held at their quarters at the Wentworth.

There is also provision for sufficient refreshment during the session, a perfectly equipped dining room and kitchen having been instituted, with a chef from Washington in charge.

CZAR ANXIOUS FOR PEACE, SAYS BERLIN REPORT

Berlin, Aug. 5.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Post telegraphs his paper as fol ows.

"I am able to state positively that the Czar and Czarina are also anxiously awaiting a hearty desire to rthe termination of the war. He is sincerely willing to make concessions. He only asks Japan to consider Russia's self-esteem as a great power. Then good relations between both powers, such as Witte advocates, will be quite possible."

It is well known that the Post is often used as the mouthpiece of the Russian foreign office.

Episcopalians' Prayer for a Peace Agreement

Almighty God, whose is the spirit of unity and concord, and who maketh men to be of one mind in an house, be, we beseech Thee, with Thy servants who shall soon assemble on these shores to seek for a basis of peace. Overrule their deliberations with Thy heavenly wisdom, fill them with the spirit of brotherhood, and so hasten the day when all men shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks, when Thy children shall be taught of the Lord, when great shall be the peace of Thy children. All of which we ask through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen. Form of prayer set forth by Bishop Potter for use in the Protestant Episcopal churches of the diocese of New York during the sessions of the peace envoys.

No one except the envoys and their assistants will enter the building from the beginning of the conference to its end, or even approach the exterior.

"Admission to Building No. 86," says Admiral Mead's official order, "will be only by special passes, and a sufficient number of sentries will be placed about the building to prevent all persons from approaching it."

It will be in the big storehouse that the first reception to the nation's guests will take place, Monday morning, immediately following Rear Admiral Mead's visit to the Mayflower and Dolphin at 10 o'clock. The envoys will land at the Navy Yard at 11 o'clock.

Then will ensue the breakfast at 11:30, the ninth assorted ride to Portsmouth, and the reception at 3 o'clock at the County Court House.

On Tuesday will come the exchange of credentials, and after that—

After that, perhaps the deluge. No official is making predictions.

The envoys will probably eat together daily. They will probably sit together not longer than two hours a day. They may give out daily statements of what they do—and they may not. All these things are guesswork, for it requires every plan that has been made to be approved by the envoys.

Thinks It Means the End.

What of the future? What does this gathering of great men mean? Will it mark the end of the disastrous Eastern conflict, or is it merely an incident in the war?

"I think it means the end," said Kaju Nakamura, the best speaker of English among the Japanese reporters here. "How can it be otherwise? Russia's resources are low; she has met only defeat in battle; she has anarchy at home. And Japan is willing to-day to make peace without humiliation."

"And M. Witte's pessimism as to the outcome?"

Nakamura displayed a very white and even set of teeth and demonstrated his appreciation of diplomatic English twisting he learned at the University of New York.

"When a man thinks he knows his weakness," he said, "you do not bluff with a good hand. No? His talk will only affect the resolution of the Japanese."

Mr. Nakamura is here to speak of their hopes and each American official he meets he asks, "What do you think?" "What can I tell. The conference may fizzle out in two days and it may last until winter comes. But it may mean peace—and it may not."

All things are ready for them, however long it takes and whatever the outcome. Special cables and wires connect the hotel and Navy Yard with all the world. Day and night there will be direct connection between the Wentworth and the United States and Japan. The Associated Press stations at Hyde Park, Mass., and Hearst's post, Asa Sodin, direct wires from New York and to San Francisco will give the envoys instant connection with the cables to their respective countries.

There are more than fifty extra telegraph operators here to handle the enormous business.

The advance guard of newspaper men has arrived. Forty train loads are coming. There are three to be sent to Manchester, two to Nashua, one each to Dover, Milton, Rhode, Merrimac—famous the world over as summer resorts and writers.

Every correspondent who can get a berth at the Wentworth, but scores at Portsmouth hotels, for not only is the Wentworth turning would-be guests away without a murmur, but scores at first class hotels in the Portsmouth hotels, for not only is the Wentworth turning would-be guests away but many of the correspondents prefer to rough it at the Wentworth, as it is one of the important news may radiate from that point.

The big hotel is one of the great Summer hotels of the country. It is the property of the Frank Jones estate, and is to the general understanding in Portsmouth that that estate is footing the expense of the conference. This would be no more matter of generosity, for the Wentworth during July and August, the progressive seaside of inertia, would make a handsome profit, or would be, at the least, an attractive business proposition.

JAPS PLAN COUP AS ENVOYS MEET

London, Aug. 5.—Just at the moment when Russian and Japanese peace envoys meet in the United States, Japan plans to deliver a blow by land which will give her control for all time in the Far East.

The Mikado has practically refused to agree to an armistice now his field forces are working desperately to deliver the smashing blow which will decide the war once for all.

Dispatches to this effect came to-day from Mukden, Japan, simultaneously with dispatches from St. Petersburg, stating that Russia has practically given up hope of peace now and is preparing to act accordingly. General Linevitch is alleged to have received from the commander in chief of the enemy and ultimately conqueror, Oyama, on the other hand refuses to tax the Mikado that his forces are practically ready for the great final blow.

Battle Line of 300 Miles.

A military expert who has just arrived at Moji from Manchuria says the northern end of the impending battle will extend the world. Presenting a battle line 300 miles long, General Linevitch now lies with his force extending from the Tumen to the Amur River and to Vladivostok. Against this line, at any moment now, the Japanese are ready to hurl themselves.

In point of numbers this fight will not exceed that at Mukden, but it will be the greatest struggle the world has ever known, according to this expert Victory for the Japanese will enable them to impose any peace terms they want, and Russia must yield if she hopes ever to regain a footing in the Far East. Victory for Russia will not strengthen her position at the peace conference greatly, for the reason that Russia's great weakness is now at sea.

Little Hope of Peace.

Experts do not believe, despite General Linevitch's optimism, that he will be able to check the Japanese when the fight begins. The very fact that his army extends along a line 300 miles long makes it appear to them an easy matter, comparatively, for Field Marshal Oyama to cut it to pieces at will, segregate the portions of it as he did at Mukden, and wipe them out of existence.

St. Petersburg dispatches to-day say:

Believing that there is no purpose on the part of the Czar to accede to any Japanese demand which will bring peace, the reform leaders here contend it is the duty of their conviction that peace ought to be made.

"The General Staff indicates the nature of the campaign that it is expected will be carried on as soon as the rains in Manchuria are over. General Linevitch has abandoned the idea of reassuming the offensive and has completed arrangements for a withdrawn defensive. He has telegraphed that he is confident that he can wear out the enemy.

"A feeling amounting almost to certainty exists in the Russian capital that the conference between the Russian and Japanese

GIRL'S DEATH AFTER 12 DAYS' SLEEP REVEALS STRANGE MYSTERY

POLICE SEARCH FOR MAN AND WOMAN.

Believed That Death Was Due to Blow in Providence, but When, by Whom or Exactly Where, No One Can Tell

TAKEN TO THE MALDEN HOSPITAL BY AUNT

Physicians Agree That Death Could Not Have Been Caused by a Fall, and the Police Say They Are Investigating

Deep mystery envelops the cause of the death of Miss Anna Stuthard, a young woman who lay in the Malden Hospital twelve days in a semi-conscious condition, and who, the physicians who attended her and performed the autopsy on her body yesterday, declare died as the result of a blow.

The injury that caused the girl's death, it is believed, was recieved in Providence. The police are directing their efforts to clear up the case toward establishing the identity of a woman, well dressed and conspicuously bejewelled, who brought the girl to the home of her aunt, Mrs. G. E. Mitchell of No 10 Evertt street, Malden, and left her there without giving any explanation of her connection with the case.

A clever musician and dancer, Miss Stuthard had been on the stage for a time, but she apparently did not make a success. When she was brought home to her aunt she was only able to say:

"Aunty—oh, aunty!"

COULD NOT HAVE BEEN FALL.

She did not have a penny in her pocket. These addresses were found after her death:

"Della La Fleur, No. 214 Messer street, Providence, R. I.

"Mrs. Lucy Smith, No. 31 South Main street, Providence, R. I."

Besides these names and numbers, one of which was written on a brown piece of paper as though torn from a bag in a grocery store and the other apparently from the finish of a letter, there were two dice in the hand satchel.

The doctors in the case say that death was undoubtedly caused from a blow. One of them declares that it might have been from a sandbag. It could not have been caused by a fall, they assert.

After the autopsy the doctors made the report that it was a case for the police. Without doubt they believed that it was a murder. Sergeant Foley of the Malden police, who was in charge of the station when a reporter of the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN called, said:

Police All at Sea.

"Yes, we received a report of the death of the young woman. But we haven't done anything, that is, we haven't found out anything yet."

"Did the physicians report the cause of the death?"

"Yes, the girl died from the result of something wrong with the back of her head. It was a blood clot. It might have been caused by a fall. It was a sort of growth."

Miss Douglas, the head nurse at the Malden City Hospital, where the girl died, said:

"The girl, Annie Stuthard, was brought here on July 23 by her aunt, Mrs. Mitchell, who said she had arrived at her house the day before. She said she had been brought from Providence by a man and a woman whom the aunt did not know.

"When she reached Mrs. Mitchell's house she was in a dazed condition, and she remained that way all the time she was at the hospital, until her death. She was about twenty years of age."

Made No Statement.

"At no time while she was here did she recover sufficiently to make a statement. On Thursday last she died and an autopsy was performed that night upon the body. The cause of death was found to be a clot of blood upon the brain. There was no mark on the outside of the head. Dr. Fritz W. Gay of No. 67 Salem street, Malden, one of the physicians who performed the autopsy, can tell more completely the cause of her death."

Dr. Gay, who is a pathologist and one of the hospital staff, when seen at his office by the reporter made this statement:

"After the autopsy Dr. Kingsbury, Dr. Plummer, Dr. Pryor and myself agreed that the girl's death was due to a clot of blood on the surface of the brain near the base of the skull, caused undoubtedly by a blow. The clot was three inches in diameter and there is no doubt that had the girl been treated in Providence when she was injured, her life would have been saved.

No Mark on Outside.

"There is no reason to believe that the clot came from anything but a blow, and it is possible that it might have been caused by a sandbag, as there was no mark on the outside of the head. This is sometimes the case where the head is struck with a sandbag.

"But even if anything was used that would have caused a lump or an abrasion, there might have been plenty of time for it to disappear, for the aunt stated that the girl told her she had been ailing for four or five weeks.

"It is not probable that the injury was caused by a fall, as in such cases we usually find a fracture of the skull at the autopsy."

Dr. M. R. Cummings of Malden was called to see the girl on the evening that she was brought to her aunt's. This is what he had to say:

"When I visited Miss Stuthard she was troubled with a slight fever. She was partially conscious at times, but did not make any coherent statements.

"The thing that a physician would most naturally think in connection with an examination of her case was that she had been struck in the head with something. I only called on her once before she was taken to the hospital."

Was Talented Musician.

This is the statement of the dead girl's aunt, Mrs. G. E. Mitchell, who lives at No. 10 Everett street, Malden:

"Anna's home was at Dartmouth, N. S., just across from Halifax. Her mother, my sister, is dead. Her father may be living, but I do not know where he is. She has a brother living with her grandmother, Mrs. Anne Hutchinson, in Dartmouth. We brought Anna here from Dartmouth nine years ago. She was as one of our own children and we intended to educate her in music, in which she was especially talented.

"Three years ago she left us and went on the stage. We don't know anything about the companies with which she was connected, except that we learned that she was with the Troubadors that stranded in Montreal.

"After that she came back. That was a year ago last February. She remained here eight weeks, and then one day went to a matinee and I did not see her until she was brought here two weeks from to-day. I was at the restaurant that I and my husband conduct, when my little boy came to me and said that there was a woman and a man at the house who wanted to see me. I hurried home and when I went in I saw a poor, sick-looking girl in a chair, who exclaimed:

Strange Woman with Her.

"'Oh, Auntie.'

"'For God's sake, Annie,' I said, 'is that you?'

"She fell back in a faint. I helped her to bed. Then I turned my attention to the woman who was with her. She was dressed in white and covered with diamonds. She would not tell me her name. She said she had heard of Annie's sickness and wanted to help her. She had become acquainted with her in Boston, she said. Just before the woman went away she went to the bedside of Anna and said:

"'Annie, be good and mind your auntie.'

"Annie did not improve, and that night I called Dr. Cummings. He advised that she be taken to the hospital, and it was done the next day.

"Both myself and my husband believe that the girl met with foul play. The woman who brought her here said that I would hear from her again, but I did not. We buried Annie to-day in the Forestdale Cemetery."

Berlin, N. H., Aug. 5.—The police have not yet made any effort to arrest City Treasurer and Clerk William A. Boothby, although he is said to be under surveillance and is liable to be arrested at any moment on the charge of defalcation of between $7,000 and $8,000 from the city.

An expert accountant has been working on the books of the city for several days and yesterday it was discovered that Mr. Boothby was short in his accounts. While the investigation by the accountant was progressing Mr. Boothby left his office and went to his home, where he is said to have attempted suicide by drinking laudanum. Emetics were immediately administered and Boothby's life was saved.

Boothby is fifty-five years old, married and has three children.

RUSSELL SAGE, 89, STAYS AT HOME

New York, Aug. 5.—For the first time since his entrance into Wall street, Russell Sage celebrated his birthday away from his beloved office. The burden of eighty-nine years and his recent illness combined to induce him to [illegible] his work upon his ancient [illegible] associates and meet Father Time [illegible] of his Summer residence, in Cedarhurst, L. ## COTTON KING SULLY CALLS A $40,000 CLAIM TOO BIG.

Asks Court to Reduce Bill for Which Furniture Firm Has Placed Attachment on His Watch Hill Residence

Special to the Sunday American.

Providence, R. I., Aug. 5.—Daniel J. Sully, the former cotton king, and his wife appeared before Judge Brown in the Superior Court to-day, asking that the court reduce the claim for $40,000 for which [illegible] & Co., the local furniture [illegible], are suing Mrs. Sully. The bill is for furniture alleged to have been installed in the $250,000 mansion in New York which Sully gave his wife two years ago.

Through counsel Sully testified that he thought the furniture bill was about $75,000 and that he sent a check for that amount on account. He received a total bill for $104,000, leaving $29,000 due on the bill. He offered $15,000 to close the account but the offer was rejected.

Potter & [illegible] brought suit for $40,000 to protect the balance alleged to be due, and the defendants ask a reduced judgment. The plaintiffs have put an attachment on the Sully residence at Watch Hill, which proceeding Mrs. Sully styles "outrageous."

Congressman Botkin Gives Praise to Pe-ru-na For His Recovery.

EX CONGRESSMAN BOTKIN, OF WINFIELD, KANS.

Hon. J. D. Botkin, Ex-Congressman, Winfield, Kans., writes:

"It gives me pleasure to certify to the excellent curative qualities of your medicines, Peruna and Manalin.

"I have been afflicted more or less for a quarter of a century with catarrh of the stomach and constipation. A residence in Washington increased these troubles.

"A few bottles of your medicines have given me almost complete relief, and I am sure that a continuation of them will effect a permanent cure.

"Peruna is surely a wonderful remedy for catarrhal affections."

ANOTHER REMARKABLE CURE: Mr. F. R. Cox, Center Oak, Pa., writes: "I was taken with hemorrhages of the stomach and had from one to three a year. The doctors said my stomach could not be cured, and it was only a question of how soon one of these spells would kill me, and I was given up several times.

"I finally wrote to you and you said that if it was not a cancer or a tumor Peruna would cure me. I commenced taking Peruna right away and have never had one of those spells since. I am an old soldier, one of Phil Sheridan's Rough Riders, and nearly played out now, but I have a pretty good stomach again."

DUKE'S OWN ARE ARMED, BUT 'WALK.'

Laws of Massachusetts Say They Cannot "March," but Canadians, Breaking Step, Avoid Breaking the Statute

HEARTY RECEPTION TO THE OTTAWA COMPANY

They Perambulate the Streets Bearing Weapons, but Peace of Boston Is Undisturbed. Programme of Entertainment

TO MARCH—V. I. to move with regular steps, as a soldier; to walk in a grave, deliberate or stately manner, to advance steadily.—Webster's Dictionary.

TO WALK—V. I., to move along on foot, to advance by steps, to go at a moderate pace.—Webster's Dictionary.

The Duke of Cornwall's Own Rifles from Ottawa, Canada, avoided breaking the old Bay State law which forbids foreign troops marching on Massachusetts soil "under arms." On their arrival here yesterday they did not "march" throught the streets. They shouldered arms and "walked."

When they returned from Providence at night they "walked" from the Back Bay station to the Irvington street armory. So, though they bore arms, the law remained inviolate and the rights and peace of Boston were safeguarded. According to the precedent thus established any body of foreign troops has a right to perambulate the State, arms and all, providing they walk, but do not march. As long as their progress is a walk and not a march it cannot be helped if battle, murder and sudden death follow in their train. This is an interesting point that has been raised since the soldierly, clean cut young Canadians of the "Duke's Own" went on their "walk" here.

Fine Looking Body of Men.

"Walk" or "march" or however, the Duke's Own Rifles, or the Forty third Regiment, Active Militia of Canada, is a fine-looking body of men. They were heartily cheered when they arrived here. They were en route to Crescent Beach, R. I., where they spent the first day of their outing in New England. They arrived at the North station at 7:08 and 7:18, in two sections. They were 500 strong, officers and men, under command of Lieutenant-Colonel S. Maynard Rogers.

It was [illegible] at first that Major General Lord Ay[illegible] inspector general of the Canadian [illegible] and Sir Frederick Borden, the [illegible] minister of militia, would come with them.

When it was found that the Canadians could not "march" from the North station, this difficulty was obviated by rushing them overhead on a special elevated train. But the troops had to get some how from the North station train to the adjacent station of the elevated, necessitating their going [illegible] the corner to the el[illegible] larly, they had to [illegible] train to [illegible] though they [illegible] floors [illegible] technicality [illegible] troops "walked" [illegible] vated train and [illegible] train to [illegible] not "march." [illegible] "walked" from the station to the armory, arms and all. They never "marched" once and the law was preserved.

Given Hearty Greeting.

The Canadians were greeted with cheers from an unofficial multitude of spectators at the North Station, also by an official delegation consisting of Lieutenant-Colonel Courtenay, Major J. R. Smith, Lieutenant C. M. Cleveland and Lieutenant D. M. Hopkins of the British Naval Association of Boston, and by Adjutant General Stopford, Colonel Cole, Major Mitchell, Major Crowley, Colonel Oakes and Captain F. A. Walker of the Massachusetts militia.

The "Duke's Own" were then whirled to the South Station, went to Providence, were guests of honor at "British Day" in Crescent Park and started back to this city at nightfall.

The men spent the night in Irving on street armory. The officers were guests at the Copley Square Hotel. Yesterday evening the officers were entertained at dinner at the Algonquin Club, being the guests of the State of Massachusetts, over whose soil they had not [illegible]

Governor Douglas and other distinguished men have been invited. ## CANADIAN SOLDIERS ADMIRED BY 20,000 AT CRESCENT PARK

Providence, R. I., Aug. 5.—The Duke of Cornwall's own regiment [illegible] from Boston to-day was the star attraction at Crescent Park, where 20,000 people gathered to celebrate "British Day." Every section of the State was represented, nearly all the mills having closed, giving the operatives a full holiday. Prior to the exercises at Crescent Park a large parade was held in this city, headed by Chief Marshal Frederick Wild. The British Veterans Association of Rhode Island, the Sons of St. George, Uniformed Rank four Manchester Unity lodges of Odd Fellows, and Clans Cameron and Fraser of Pawtucket marched to the music of two bands and were reviewed at City Hall by Acting Mayor Reynolds. At the park another review was held, the Forty third Regiment bearing arms.

The British Veteran Association of Boston, Lieutenant Colonel Courtney in command, also won much praise.

"HOW I RODE MY OWN HORSE AND WON THE RACE." WOMAN JOCKEY'S GRAPHIC TALE OF TURF TRIUMPH

Disappointed by Boy at Last Minute, She Rides Mare to Victory Herself.

Like the conception of a writer of melodrama is the true story of how plucky and pretty Mrs. Ada Evans Dean of Grafton, Mass., met the emergency made by the failure of her jockey at the last moment, and, mounting Moorish Dance, her own horse, at the Liberty, N. Y., track, rode her to victory in a field of eleven fleet-footed racers.

The brilliant and novel feat was witnessed by thousands of delighted spectators who were unprepared for this impromptu feature of the program. Two races in one day did the little woman wrest from her more experienced male competitors.

"Come at once. McNamara can't ride Moorish Dance. Bring riding clothes."

That was the message Mrs. Dean received at her home from her husband. Although she never rode in a race except at the Worcester Fair last Fall and had never been on the back of Moorish Dance in a gallop, the fair jockey hesitated not a second. She has told the story of the race graphically for the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN:

By Mrs. Ada Evans Dean.

My horse was entered in the races at Liberty, N. Y. My husband was there and I was at home. All went well up to the last minute and then my jockey failed me. The stake money was up and it was a case of forfeit that or find a new rider. It was at that moment my husband thought of me and sent the wire. Within two hours I was on my way to the track.

I knew what Moorish Dance could do and when I saw her I found that she was in good shape. When I reached the stable the first person I saw was my jockey.

"Where did you come from?" he gasped.

"I am going to ride Moorish Dance," I replied.

I was not in the least afraid, nor was I excited. The first trouble was to get the consent of the judges. They balked. So did the jockeys. The judges seemed to think that I might fall off and get hurt. The jockeys had never competed with a woman. I told them the position I was in. I told them that all I wanted was an equal show, with no favors. They finally consented.

When I appeared on the track I caused a sensation, I know. I wore a white, gold and purple suit. At the grand stand a round of applause greeted me. It appeared to be well meant, and it inspired me with confidence. I got a good start, and, amid cheers and hand clappings, we were off.

Resolved to Be Game and Stay to Finish.

But I was not in the least frightened, nor was Moorish Dance. She had never been ridden in a race before by a woman but I felt that she would act well. I fully appreciated that I was competing against some of the best jockeys in the country and I knew that if I lost my head for a moment I would lose the race. I resolved to be game and stay to the finish.

I had not covered a quarter of the distance when I began to feel that the race was mine. I felt that way right up to the finish, in spite of the fact that the pace was a very hard one. The boys were not only riding for their owners but they did not want to be beaten by a woman. It became a sort of personal matter with them. It was also a personal and financial matter with me.

In my ears was the thunder of hoofs and the dust rose in clouds. I sat firmly, kept a tight rein, looked straight ahead and rode for all I was worth. I did not use spurs and hardly touched the mare with the whip. Instead I spoke to her, gently, coaxingly. And she seemed to hear and understand.

On and on we flew and I was well in the front, but of course could not tell when one of the other ten horses might creep up on me, and maybe forge ahead. But I didn't give up hope and confidence for a single second.

Mrs. Ada Evans Dean of Grafton, Mass., Riding Her Own Horse, Moorish Dance, to Victory at Liberty, N. Y., Track After the Jockey Engaged to Ride Had Disappointed Her.

Asks No Odds and Receives None.

Pretty soon the colors at the grandstand blazed in my eyes and I realized that the race was about finished. I urged Moorish Dance with a gentle touch of the whip and a few words of encouragement, and then the cries of delight rang in my ears from the great throng of people and I knew I had won.

I was very, very happy because I wanted to win that race very much. The other riders had the advantage of me in weight, as I tipped the scales at 1-1, and none of the others weighed more than 11[illegible]. I won two races that day. Afterwards I went to Island Park Track, Albany, and met with good success.

In the riding I asked no odds and received none. In one heat I was disqualified on the charge that I had tried to crowd one of the jockeys off the track. All I was doing was trying to keep him from crowding me off. The judges decided against me and I lost the heat, but it came out all right because I took the next two heats and won the race.

Once I had some rough experiences with one of the jockeys. He intentionally bumped me with his horse twice, and I think tried to put me out of the race by crowding me off the track. He apologized afterwards and, taking it all in all, I think that I have been treated very fairly.

Rode Her First Race Last Fall.

I value Moorish Dance at $1,500 and I propose to race her until I get back all the money that I have invested in her. If I had not won that first race at Liberty I might not have been able to keep my horse. Now I shall be able to do so.

I have always been fond of a fine horse and have been used to them since a child. My parents were English and both riders in Old England, where we lived long ago and used to follow the hounds of Lord Somebody—it doesn't matter who—so I come naturally by my love of horses and riding.

But in spite of the fact that I was never afraid of a horse and have had the handling of them all my life, I never rode one at a gallop until about two years ago. I had been on their backs many times and jogged them around, but never let one out until a couple of years ago, and I never dreamed at that time of riding in public on the track.

We had a pretty good horse here at home, and after a time I got so I could gallop him about without getting thrown. Just for the fun of the thing I consented to ride at the fair in Worcester last Fall, where I came in second in the first race of my life. Later in the season I won races with the same horse at Stafford Springs and Sturbridge. I liked the sport and gained a confidence in myself that I never had before. There is nothing like horseback riding for exercise and sport for me. When I get tired and am out of sorts here in the house a good gallop with my horse does me a lot of good.

None of my brothers or sisters takes very much to horses. My sister, Ruby, who lives with me, thought a while ago that she would like to take a ride on one of my horses. So I started her off down the road. Pretty soon I heard a horse coming at a fast clip and on rushing to the door there was the horse on the dead run with Ruby clinging to his neck and calling, "Whoa! Whoa!"

I ran out into the road and managed to catch hold of the bridle and, after being dragged quite a distance, I stopped the horse and my sister dropped to the ground. Ruby has never asked to try a horse since.

Lorraine, Lorraine, Lorree.

This poem, telling how a young wife rode a horse to victory under difficulties, was written by Charles Kingsley. The poem says that the rider was booked to ride the horse, to keep him first and to win the race. That is what Mrs. Dean did.

"Are you ready for your steeplechase, Lorraine, Lorraine, Lorree?
Barum, Barum, Barum, Barum, Barum, Barum, Baree.
You're booked to ride your capping race to-day at Coulterlee,
You're booked to ride Vindictive, for all the world to see,
To keep him straight, and keep him first, and win the race for me.
Barum, Barum, Barum, Barum, Barum, Barum, Baree."

She clasped her new-born baby, poor Lorraine, Lorraine, Lorree.
Barum, Barum, Barum, Barum, Barum, Barum, Baree.
"I cannot ride Vindictive, as any man might see,
And I will not ride Vindictive, with this baby on my knee;
He's killed a boy, he's killed a man, and why must he kill me?"

"Unless you ride Vindictive, Lorraine, Lorraine, Lorree,
Unless you ride Vindictive to-day at Coulterlee,
And land him safe across the brook, and win the blank for me,
It's you may keep your baby, for you'll get no keep from me."

"That husbands could be cruel," said Lorraine, Lorraine, Lorree,
"That husbands could be cruel, I have known for seasons three;
But, oh! to ride Vindictive while a baby cries for me,
And be killed across a fence at last for all the world to see."

She mastered young Vindictive—Oh! the [illegible] she
And kept him straight and won the race as [illegible] could be;
But he [illegible] at the brook against a [illegible]
Oh! he killed her at the brook, the brute, for all the world to see,
And no one but the baby cried for poor Lorraine, Lorree.

FISHERMEN, IN GRIP OF SALT FAMINE, ALARMED.

Scarcity of Trapani Product, Valuable for Curing Properties, Causes Anxiety at Gloucester and in Boston

Boston and Gloucester are in the grip of a salt famine and the fish packers in both cities are uneasy. They have used up every pound of Trapani salt, the kind best suited for curing fish, and in desperation are turning to other kinds not suited for the purpose in order to save the fish on hand from spoiling.

This situation is extraordinary, Boston dealers say. It is the first time in the history of New England that a salt famine has occurred. Several causes contribute to the result. In the first place, Gloucester wholesale fish dealers have stocked up very heavily with domestic fish, fearing trouble with the Canadian Government this fall and Winter because of the attitude of Newfoundland fishermen in refusing bait to American vessels. The factories at Gloucester have done a much greater business than in previous years, and have used up the entire stock of Trapani salt on hand.

Two schooners which left the Trapani Islands the latter part of May, heavily laden with salt, are two weeks overdue. Ten thousand tons of salt is consigned to the Eastern Salt Company of State street, the only importers in New England.

The manager of one of the largest fish concerns in Boston said: "Until these schooners from Trapani Island arrive the situation will be serious."

Nearly twice as many fish of every kind arrived in Boston last week as arrived the corresponding period of last year. Seventy-four vessels which made port brought in the following: 193,000 mackerel; 235 salmon, 806,800 pounds of swordfish, 2,879,700 pounds of haddock, cod and hake, and 53,860 lobsters.

Six times as many mackerel arrived this week as the same week last Summer but the fish are no cheaper, either wholesale or retail. The mackerel catch to date this Summer by the New England fleet is nearly eight thousand barrels ahead of last season's record at this time.

WIDOW IS SUED BY GIRL DESERTED BY SWEETHEART.

Pretty Young Seamstress of Taunton Blames Former Employer for the Loss of Her Young Man's Affections

Taunton, Aug. 5.—Miss Exilia Alice Nolette, a pretty young seamstress of this city, is suing her former employer, Mrs. Josephine Nadeau, a widow, on the ground that Mrs. Nadeau broke up the marriage arranged between Miss Nolette and Clarence LeBeau. Mrs. Nadeau is a dressmaker.

According to Miss Nolette's story, she was betrothed to LeBeau, who was in business in the North End. They had a marriage contract and LeBeau was anxious to have the marriage take place. He was so impatient, Miss Nolette declares, that she finally consented to hurry up her wedding preparations and become his wife in a few days.

So she dutifully told her employer, Mrs. Nadeau, that she intended to be married soon. Then the trouble began. Mrs. Nadeau, so Miss Nolette says, was strongly opposed to the marriage for some reason. Mrs. Nadeau went to LeBeau and talked about Miss Nolette, the latter declares.

Then LeBeau's love waned. Instead of being an impatient lover he became cold and formal. Finally he left the city, and Miss Nolette realized that there was to be no marriage for her.

Miss Nolette asks that $2,000 be awarded her for her injured feelings. She has attached Mrs. Nadeau's bank account.

TWO NEAR DEATH IN IPSWICH BAY.

Ira McLean and Thomas Herbert, of the Ward 9 Yacht Club, Washed Overboard from the Frolic in Gale

MANAGED TO REACH DRIFTING TENDER

The sloop yacht Frolic, of the Ward Nine Yacht Club, with seven Boston men aboard, was badly battered by a gale in Ipswich Bay yesterday afternoon. Mate Ira McLean and Thomas Herbert were washed overboard. The men left aboard cut the tender loose and the two men, swimming for life in the angry waters, managed to get aboard of the drifting tender.

They were picked up by the volunteer life savers from Plum Island and the battered yacht and the worn-out yachtsmen made their way to Rockport Harbor. There the Frolic put up for the night.

The Frolic left City Point the first of the week for a week's cruise off the coast of Maine. Those in the party were Captain James G. Farrell, Mate Ira McLean, Thomas Herbert, Councilman Thomas Joyce of Ward 17; Benjamin Ouillette, George Dresser and Maurice Murphy.

They had a good time up and down the Maine coast, in Portland harbor and at Peak's Island, and then started back to Boston.

At one o'clock, as they were going through Ipswich Bay, the wind freshened to a gale and the fifty-two-foot sloop was kicked about like a straw. The mainsail was blown to rags, the lighter rigging was badly damaged, and the seams were started.

After the rescue of McLean and Herbert the yachtsmen were thankful to take their crippled vessel into Rockport Harbor and get out of the blow.

LOVE OF EXCITEMENT MADE GIRL LEADER OF BANDIT GANG

RULED ROBBERS FOR WEEK BEFORE SHE WAS CAUGHT.

Bennington, Vt., Aug. 5.—Finding life in Dorset Hollow dull, handsome and colorless, eighteen-year-old Lavinia Landfear deliberately sought relief in a nomad life of criminal evil-doing.

Joining three men outlaws, accepting their methods of life, helping them steal, tramping with them from place to place, she has just ended a wild, but brief career of 000 week, by being arrested and lodged, under $1,000 bail, in the Bennington jail, where she occupies the same cell in which Mary Rogers awaited trial.

One of her companions, Albert Ross of Boston as subject of suspicion in the eyes of the police, was shot and killed in flight.

wild night flight which resulted in the breaking up of the gang.

Tim Brockway, one-eyed, repulsive, stupid, is in jail, and Merritt Reed, Vinie Landfear's cousin and an ex-convict, is still at liberty.

Lavinia Landfear, who at eighteen has been a wife and mother as well as bandit leader, is rather large and unusually strong. She is dark, with rather heavy features, and has a face in which the traces of her vicious life are beginning to show.

She shows no worry over her present predicament, nor remorse for her past, and talks freely of her life.

When interviewed for the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN she was writing to her mother for clothing.

By Lavinia Landfear.

It was awful dull in Dorset, and I was always fond of excitement. That's why I joined the gang.

I was married last Fall, but my husband left me, and then I met Allie Ross. He was working on the Equinox golf course and went by our house every day. After a while he used to stop. Then I fell in love with him and he persuaded me to leave home and go with him. Then he fell in with "Brock" and Reed.

Allie said if I would go on the road with them I could be leader of the band. I was, too, for they nearly always took my advice.

If they had done as I said that night we would never have been caught.

I thought it would be fun to cook and do the camp work for the boys. And it was lots of fun.

We always had plenty to eat. Most every meal we had chicken. I really began to get tired of chicken. The boys found it easy to get the birds from the river or from roosts in Pawlet. I don't know whose they were.

We took clothes, too. The boys' duds got torn, and, as the Franklin house seemed a likely looking place, we went there one night and found the linen full.

We got some of Patrick Ryan's milk and butter without much trouble. Up at James Cox's place Robert was a good scout to find things to eat lying around loose.

The boys never did much damage to property, except once to Ex-Constable Glenn in East Rupert. They smashed open the front door there while the folks were away and broke the brass vase.

They took a dress suit case and some trinkets of jewelry.

Planned to Rob Store.

I was with the boys just a week before they run us in and they went out somewhere every night. Sometimes I would stay to see the fun but not always. The only thing that we planned was to get in a load for a store in Dorset.

We intended to do that Friday night, but when we were going along by some houses a woman yelled at us about stealing some stuff and I thought that we had better get out.

The boys were getting bad and wanted to stay, but I was afraid I might get into trouble, for I thought the people were getting after us so that we were intending to go up further north than they got us.

The last night Allie and I were with them we stayed in a summer at the village near the road from Rupert Center to East Rupert. This was the night after the chase Sunday. We next day we walked almost to Pawlet and passed through there at dusk at night. We slept in a barn beyond Pawlet. It was on the farm owned by Henry Allen.

That night we robbed a clothesline in the hotel yard in Pawlet. We also stole chickens.

The next day we walked to Granville, N. Y., and spent Sunday night. Friday afternoon we started to walk to East Rupert, where we were going to camp in the woods. That was to be our headquarters. We were alone there when the officers got us. It was an exciting week. And I love excitement!

GIRL BANDIT'S LIFE WARNING TO OTHERS

By Eleanor Ames.

The story of Lavinia Landfear, a self-avowed criminal and outlaw at eighteen, is one lurid in its sensationalism and fearful in its degradation.

With her childhood days only just around the corner, this girl, who could not stand the dulness of life in Dorset Hollow, finds herself in the same miserable cell in the Bennington jail where for seven long months Mary Rogers awaited trial, charged with immorality, larceny and vagrancy. The dreadful life she had led, the indulgence, the depravity, the wickedness of it all seems to have had little effect upon her.

She declares that she hates her parents. She refers to her marriage in lightest terms.

She speaks of her two-year-old baby with the frankness

Asked who was the child's father she replied with a disgusted flippancy almost beyond belief "I don't know, do you?"

All the food she finds uninteresting to Lavinia Landfear.

All that is evil seems bright and attractive. Her distorted nature feeds on malicious excitement. To the average human being who believes that nearly everyone is possessed of more good than bad traits, she is beyond comprehension.

Her life and her vicious tastes seem all the more remarkable when one considers that she is of Puritan ancestry and has been reared in an atmosphere of New England conservatism and respectability.

Of Respectable Family.

Coming of most respected parents, William and Mary Reed Landfear, both of whom take keen pride in the fact that they trace their lineage back in a great line to the earliest and best settlers of Massachusetts and Connecticut, she has been reared by doting up, and if she has not been a favorite with what she has very naturally felt is not her parents' fault.

All three sisters are held in good repute. There are three brothers. The husband of the family seems interested in Vinie, who is a source as well as puzzle to her kin.

When a mere baby she pilfered and hid her playmates' toys.

At fourteen she ran away from home.

Even then she was the unbearable darling of Dorset Hollow as her excuses for her wanderings.

Lavinia Landfear is not the first girl who has complained of the deadly dullness of Dorset Hollow as her excuse for her lack of virtue and she will not be the last to see in Lavinia Landfear a moral monster, unless the view of her as commonplace, with the dullness as the influence, is preferable to animal-like excitement that lives and revels especially husband in life and breath.

A Lesson to Others.

And why should Dorset Hollow or any other lovely, peaceful New England village be dull? Dulness is in reality a state of mind rather than of environment.

By rights, Dorset Hollow should be vital with interest. Lying between two ranges of the Green Mountains, in the heart of the beautiful State of Vermont, it enjoys natural beauties of unsurpassed grandeur. On three sides, the mountains, high, rugged, majestic, symbols of strength in the fourth side opens the loveliest valley in all New England. Nowhere are skies bluer, nowhere the sunshine more glorious, nowhere the air purer and more invigorating.

Why should it be dull with those splendid, majestic mountains, the giant trees, the changing scenery, shifted by the successive seasons?

And with loving parents and six other children how can a home be dull?

Lavinia Landfear admits that she was "kinder wild." But it was not the "awful wild existence" which made her so.

It was a lack of power to see and want the right in spite and shun the evil.

Marriage made no difference in her life. Motherhood did not soften her heart and hunger for land career. On and on she went, from bad to worse, the companion of thieves and housebreakers.

Now, at eighteen years of age, she faces three serious criminal charges and occupies a cell in jail.

Verily she is an object lesson to other girls who chafe because home life is dull.

Saratoga, N. Y., Aug. 5.—Isidore Wormser, Jr., of New York, who was operated on Thursday at the United States Hotel, does not seem to improve, and Dr. T. S. Hay says there is danger from septic poisoning.

Why Lavinia Landfear Chose Outlaw's Life

It was awful dull in Dorset and I always liked excitement. Allie said that I could be Queen of the band and I was, too, for the boys took my advice and did what I said.—From interview given BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN by Lavinia Landfear, girl bandit

TRANSFER BOAT WITH COLONIAL EXPRESS ON THE ROCKS.

Passengers In Panic as the Maryland Strikes, but No Damage Is Done, and She Is Floated in Fifteen Minutes

New York, Aug. 5. The transfer boat Maryland, of the New York New Haven & Hartford railroad, entering the fast Washington express, grounded on the rocks in the East River, off Sixty-fifth street this afternoon.

The passengers in the train were panic-stricken when the boat went aground. Men, women and children were thrown from their seats by the shock. Those hurrying climbed from the cars to the deck and it was only with the greatest difficulty that some of them were calmed.

One boy and a girl, who could not restrain their fear, leaped overboard to a barge that chanced to be lying alongside. They did not return to the train, but ran from the barge and disappeared. Investigation showed that the Maryland had sustained no serious damage. Wrecking tugs succeeded in pulling her off the rocks, after she had been aground for only fifteen minutes and she proceeded down the river and around the Battery to Jersey City.

Formerly Beatrice Winans, Is Now Allied to One of the Oldest Families in the Aristocracy of French Nation

Newport, R. I., Aug. 5. The beautiful Princess De Beam de Chalais, whom Newporters remember as little Beatrice Winans, daughter of Ross H. Winans of Baltimore, arrived here from Lenox to-night accompanied by her husband Prince De Beam de Chalais.

This is the Princess's first visit to Newport since she left this country a young girl to reside in Paris. When last here she was a girl of fourteen or fifteen years' standing, and now she returns as the bride of one of the oldest families in France. While abroad she met and was wooed and won by an ardent husband, the marriage taking place in Paris last April.

The prince and princess arrived in New York last night on the steamer [illegible] and to-day in an interview with a local AMERICAN representative Princess [illegible] expressed herself as delighted to get back to Newport. She said:

"I have been just crazy to get back to Newport. America is the greatest country in the world and Newport is the most beautiful spot in America. I feel almost like a stranger here.

New Hampshire, Aug. 5.—A special to the Ledger from Madison says:

Teddy Roosevelt, Jr., proved himself the best cakewalker in this section last evening, for which he gets pretty young lady partner. He carried off the honors at a party given in Miss Marion Wentz at her summer home.

Miss Wentz got up a party in honor of the son of the President and invited all the pretty young ladies of Madison Beach to the event. They all came, of course, to see Teddy Jr., and he proved to be quite the centre of attraction.

Music was furnished by Redfield and Pinkos mandolin and guitar quartette.

HEADS, GLASS AND DISHES SMASHED BY KELLY GANG.

Reign of Terror on New York East Side Brings Out Fifty Angry Policemen, Who Save One Man from Brutal Death

New York, Aug. 5. The notorious Paul Kelly gang to which much lawlessness and crime have been attributed, began a temporary reign of terror in the lower East Side section to-night and window smashing, a stores without hold a bunch of police headquarters in Monterey street, and ended by beating a man so badly that he may not recover.

With plate glass windows crashing first on one side and then on the other in the vicinity of Houston street and the Bowery, fifty angry policemen tried in vain to catch the elusive hoodlum.

A coffee house was next raided, the gang's only object being to smash up the dishes, which was done after the waiters had been driven into the street.

The police were hot on the trail of the toughs by this time, and rescued Christo Colalanca, a Greek, after his face had been lacerated and two ribs broken. The gang was robbing him of pennies and nickels. Only one member of the party was arrested.

REVERE GRAFT CHARGE MADE AGAIN TO-DAY.

Rev. J. P. Bixby Declares He Will Repeat in His Pulpit the Statement That Resort Owners Pay for Immunity

THEY CHALLENGE HIM FOR PROOF

Minister Asserts His Belief That There Is Corruption, Though He Cannot Furnish Legal Demonstration of It

Charges of graft, made from the pulpit last Sunday by Rev. J. P. Bixby of Revere, will be repeated to-day despite denials of prominent owners of amusement enterprises that they have paid any money for illegal purposes. Mr. Bixby's charge was that they had given $2,000 for the privilege of running wide open on Sunday. Two of the proprietors of the beach declared last night that they would give $500 if the minister could substantiate these charges.

When the matter was laid before Mr. Bixby by a reporter for the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN, and he was asked if he was prepared to produce a case of "graft" he answered in the negative.

He further said that it would be unwillingly that if not altogether impossible to get the proper return of evidence that he believed to exist in the way of graft and corruption connected with the resorts would be forthcoming if he did him.

Sure Revere Has Grafters.

From what had been told him, however, he was satisfied of the existence of grafters in Revere.

"There is some money for somebody," he said, though who the somebody is he was not in a position to say.

Mr. Bixby declared that he would refuse to retract his charges of "graft" because he knows it exists, although he might be unable to prove it in a court of law. Meanwhile owners of amusement projects at the beach are indignant at the attitude he has taken. William H. Bryant, owner of the Steeplechase, said

"Mr. Bixby's charges of graft are entirely unfounded, so far as this year is concerned, at least, and if he knew of such a state of affairs existing in former years why did he not make that charge at the time, and make them specifically, which he has never now failed to do?

"I am not the agent of Mr. Bixby's church or any connected with it, but I will contribute $100 to the gentleman's church in any charity he may name, if he will prove a single instance where such a thing has existed. I am willing to go to any length to give the gentleman every opportunity to prove his statements."

J. H. Miller, manager of the Music Hall said:

The statement of Mr. Bixby concerning the payment of $2,000 in graft is ridiculous. I would be on the beach in summer and talking speaking for myself. I am willing to go to Mr. Bixby and if he will produce a single particle of proof that I have paid a cent to any official for graft. Nor do I believe that the Revere Board of Selectmen is composed of any such kind of men."

FAMOUS BIG COP OF WELLESLEY HERO OF ELOPEMENT.

W. S. Hall, Harvard Oarsman and Successful Policeman, Weds Girl Who Told Parents She Was Going to Matinee

The [illegible] of the Wellesley-Hall has resulted in adding another chapter to the already long list of romantic marriages in the vicinity of Boston.

William S. Hall, Harvard, '05, a popular oarsman and member of his class crew, and Miss Marion Mitchell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Mitchell of Hall street, Waltham, are the central figures in the latest rapid transit wedding. Last Thursday Miss Marion informed her mother that she was going to town to attend the matinee. Much to the surprise of her parents, they received a telegram that night from their daughter announcing that she had that day married the man of her heart, and asking forgiveness for the runaway stage.

The elopement started Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell to their wedded life with a philosophic view of the situation and the [illegible] forthcoming.

Married in Cambridge.

When she came into Boston on Thursday Miss Mitchell met her fiance at the North station and from there they went to Cambridge, where they were married by the Rev. Charles J. Ritcher, a prominent Unitarian minister well known in the future of which the latter, the afternoon they send this tele gram to Miss Mitchell's parents:

"Married to-day. Take us your bless ing.

"Marion William."

The fact that Miss Mitchell, or Mrs. Hall as she now is, decline to discuss their daughter's hasty wedding, and that Mr. and Mrs. Hall are now on a honeymoon trip and will make their home in Waltham with Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell, parents of the bride, Mr. Hall is particularly well known in athletic and college circles and about a year ago became known as the "big police man" on the Wellesley grounds. He is a strapping fellow, six feet, three inches tall, and looks every inch the athletic man that he was in rather poor health some years ago and his physician prescribed somethat he try outdoor life for a time. There was a vacancy on the police force in the Wellesley and Hall secured it and many are the stories told of his success as a "cop."

The town bully of Newton Lower Falls started to mix things up with Hall one night and during the encounter was so badly "mixed" that Hall had to drag him half a mile to the police station. Another of a gang of five Italians tried to "do up" the new cop. They sprung at him as he was passing a dark alley. Hall drew his club and in a few short moments all the fighting desire was knocked out of the Italians and he landed them all.

The life of a policeman was not to Hall's liking, however, and he resigned at the end of the Summer, much to the regret of the chief and the other members of the department, the chief declaring that Hall was the best officer he ever had.

His bride is well and favorably known in Waltham society and is an accomplished pianist.

135 GIRLS WANT TO BE ADOPTED BY MAN OF 70 WHO LOST OWN DAUGHTER

THE HOME OF JOHN HATHAWAY.

JOHN HATHAWAY AT HIS DAUGHTERS GRAVE.

GERTRUDE LOUISE HATHAWAY.

John Hathaway, Heart-broken at Death of Only Child, Advertises for Another to Replace Her.

Pelham, N. H., Aug. 5.—A little ray of sunshine is just breaking through the gloom of grief that has enveloped John B. Hathaway since his beloved daughter, Gertrude Louise, died July 7 at the age of twenty-three years. For the sad rertisement which the heart-broken and lonely father has placed publicly, asking for a new daughter to be adopted and to inherit his property, has already brought 135 replies.

From seventy of these Mr. Hathaway selected two, which he is seriously considering for final choice, while the old man mourns daily at his daughter's grave in Pelham Cemetery, he hopes that the choice that is made from these many applicants for his daughter's place will result in his gaining another child to cherish and love.

These answers come from all over New England. Most of them are from girls about the age of the dead schoolgirl. A few are from older people. Some are well written, some poorly, some stupid, some bright, a merrymaking spirit. Some of the writers, alone in the world, crave a home and a father's love. Others seek only material gain. Some sympathize with the bereaved father's grief. Some breathe only a spirit of selfishness.

Sits at Daughter's Grave.

In Pelham Cemetery is a carefully-kept grave. Flowers grow on the mound and nside the flowers. A little swing shades them from the sun.

Just at one side of the mound is a low bench, and standing by it a post placed there to support a big sun umbrella. Day after day, Wednesdays and the shade of the umbrella, John Hathaway sits for several hours every day, brooding over his daughter's death. He reads the flowers and the grass on the grave. And to-day, when a BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter asked him about his daughter's death and the advertisement, he said:

"It doesn't seem real to me that Gertrude has down there in that grave. The old man's voice broke with emotion. "I can't realize it all. Gertie, my little girl whom I loved so much and whom I used to kiss and love and for whom I had such hopes. I can't believe it.

The old man gazed sadly down at the green grass and the bright flowers he had planted, watered and tended on the grave.

"You see I knew Gertie was lonely, so she was an uncommonly attractive child. She had such a beautiful mind. Why, I took her everywhere with me.

"Let me think—

"No not ask me about her mother. The old man shook his head again, then went on.

"Once I owned a sugar plantation in Florida, just out of Augusta. She was there. I was there. She saw me in the big [illegible] She was well educated and bright. And then Cuba—

Again the father's voice shook:

Fell Ill and Died.

"Then she fell ill. The doctors said she must have fresh air and country life. So I brought Gertie here and bought a little place and hoped she would get better, but she didn't. One year ago this week she did not get up in the morning. She died in the room she had when a child. I knew she would never get up again. They are dead.

After a pause Mr. Hathaway asked: "You come from Boston, do you?

"Yes."

"I used to live there—with Gertie. We lived in Chelsea once. When we went back we stopped in Boston for a few days, and while she was taken sick, we had rooms on Kirk street. Then we went to Bainbridge street. No, I don't know if I shall ever go back to that city, [illegible]

You advertised for a daughter" said the reporter after this pause.

"Yes, I am the man who advertised I might—or might [illegible] I could get a daughter to replace Gertie."

The advertisement was worded, some think, queerly. It states that I shall leave my property to the girl, provided that in the meantime I do not marry. If I do marry that my wife shall be given the property. I thought that would be a restrictive clause and a safeguard as well for the right sort of girl to replace my Gertrude.

Has Chosen Two Replies.

"Some of the replies received were wonderful to spelling and orthography One was from a man on the Massachusetts State Farm, who misunderstood. Some were from girls who wanted to be considered. I set all these letters to one side and only considered such as were possibilities. The final number was 135. Of these, but seventy were worthy to be out of the seventy I am seriously considering five. Of these I selected two. I already made I do not wish to commit myself on that point now. The affair is too serious. I realize that it is a great responsibility, pressing much to the future of the girl and to myself. It is not impossible that I shall take two of the girls. If I were very rich I would make both, for all who applied and are deserving.

One positive correction should be made. I will ask the BOSTON AMERICAN to contradict the report that I am rich. I certainly am not rich. I can get along and as my advertisement shows, there will be a property remaining, but I positively am not rich.

Mr. Hathaway [illegible] many of the letters, some of the best of which, in part or in full, were:

I am accustomed to farm work and not afraid of work.

RUTH ROBBINS,
No. 1 Bryon avenue, Lawrence, Mass.

I am a good girl, twenty-six years old, a factory girl who can get along with most anybody. I will come and talk with you I could better explain than on paper.

MARY E. VARGAR,
No. 111 Abbott street, Lawrence.

I like the country and thought I would answer your advertisement. I am very young but am kind to people of years. I am forty, but of a happy and kind disposition. Am a good cook and can take care of your home and the best of references.

MISS SUSIE SHARP,
No. 2 Gouldville terrace, Roxbury, Mass.

I have no father nor mother and have to make my way alone, and I think I would like a strong home. Am sixteen years old. My eyes are blue, my hair is a dark brown and I am of rather light complexion. I am five feet and five inches tall and I weigh 135 pounds.

KATIE CUTTING,
West Waterford, Vt.

I learn that you want a housegirl. Well, if you want me I will go and try to do the best I can. No answer this note if you like.

NORA FINNEGAN,
No. 83 Andrews street, Lowell.

I would enjoy so much to have a home and I would love to care for you as your daughter would. I am fond and you must feel to lose an only child. I can cook and work and am willing to for a home and a father. I could make a nice Christian daughter and would be willing to be adopted if I prove satisfactory.

MISS LOUISE BEARD
No. 70 Hooker street, Ashland.

I am twenty-two years old, with a pet knack hair and brown eyes and about five feet five inches tall. Father died when I was very young and I have much desired another father.

MISS BESSIE FOLEY,
No. 41 Winchester street, South Medford, Mass.

I have no father at present to care for and would like to have one. I would like to go up and see you and see if I like the place. I am perfectly willing to work for a living and, if we are both suited, we can make a bargain. I am fairly alone. I am older than your daughter was. I will do every thing in my power to make you happy.

MISS E. H. BOYD,
No. 24 Russell street, Charlestown, Mass.

I am a nurse by profession. Boston does not agree with me and I want to live in the country where I can raise flowers. I am very quiet and like to be with an old person. I have dark complexion, brown hair and eyes, and am liked by every one.

MISS ELLEN STONE,
My parents are dead.

I am a girl fourteen years old. I weigh 104 pounds and am good and strong. I am not [illegible] beauty, daughters, [illegible] and different. I have had many homes since I was five years old, and would like a steady one.

MISS GERTRUDE McNALLY,
Putney, Vt.

The following came from a girl who had written once to Mr Hathaway and received an answer from him:

I am not one that would be called beautiful but am fairly good looking. I have brown hair, blue eyes and I have fair complexion. Am five feet, six inches tall and weigh 120 pounds and my birthday is March 27 and I am through school. I like such a thing as you marrying again and you said in that case your property would go to your wife. Really, I would make no difference to me, as all I ask is a father's love.

DEBBIE HARDY,
North Haven, N. H.

Here is another letter from Cambridge I am fourteen years old and large for my age. I am forced to live with my stepmother and I am fond of children and a good housekeeper and I think I could be a [illegible] in the place of your daughter.

COTTON EXPOSURES STIR MILL MEN OF NEW ENGLAND.

New England cotton manufacturers are very much wrought up over the leak in the Department of Agriculture by which speculators in the cotton market received advance information as to the contents of the report. That the New England Cotton Manufacturers' Association may take some action bearing on the recent exposures in the department at its semi-annual meeting at Atlantic City, Sept. 21-22, is the statement made by Secretary C. J. H. Woodbury to a BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter. Mr Woodbury says:

"It is an outrage that such a condition of affairs should exist in the Department of Agriculture. Such actions could never have gone on as long as they did without exposure if the higher officials had been doing their duty. Our association may take the matter up at its semi-annual meeting.

We are satisfied that the government is now making every effort to correct the abuses to which the cotton report has been subjected, but action should have been taken long ago. It is inconceivable to me how the 'deciphering' of the report and the giving it out in advance of the time on the inside should have escaped detection by the officials in charge."

ADOPTED DAUGHTER NOW TO BECOME HIS BRIDE.

Special to the Sunday American.

Providence, R. I., Aug. 5.—Announcement was made to-day of the engagement of John B. Nash to Miss Bessie P. Bertrand Nash, his seventeen-year-old adopted daughter.

The announcement was made by the young woman herself. When she was asked if the marriage of a man to his adopted daughter was not a little out of the usual course of love, Miss Bessie replied demurely:

"I don't see anything strange about it at all."

Her friends, who admire her for her good looks and charming manner declare there's nothing strange about it either, that Mr. Nash is head over here a while now, that if she is to be adopted daughter Mr. Nash is not precisely just what would be for a daughter of Bessie's age. He is thirty-six and does not seem at all anxious to be a prospective father.

Bessie Nash's original name was Bessie Bertrand, and her home was in Springfield, Mass. Her father died when she was three years old. In 1901 Mr. Nash made the acquaintance of the widow and the child and from this acquaintance was formed Mrs. Bertrand died, leaving Bessie an orphan. Mr. Nash, who is a bachelor, Mr. Nash pitied her forlorn state. Though not a wealthy man, and though unused to family cares, he adopted her.

For all such cares as were involved her grammar school studies in Springfield and in 1902 Mr. Nash moved to this city.

But the paternal interest he had in her soon changed into more like a lover's fond affection, and recently Mr. Nash asked the girl he had adopted if she would not become his wife.

Miss Nash, from dutiful regard, had learned to love the man who had been so kind to her and she was perfectly happy in saying that she would marry him.

FOUNDER OF TUFTS MEDICAL SCHOOL TO RETIRE.

Paves Way in Three Strenuous Years for New Branch of College—Dr. Thayer Will Be Succeeded by Dr. Briggs

News of the retirement of Dr. Charles P. Thayer, A. M., M. D., from his position as secretary and chief executive officer of Tufts College Medical and Dental Schools, comes as a surprise to his professional and collegiate friends. Though secretary of both of these departments, he has been chiefly identified with the medical school, of which he was the founder and the most earnest and ardent supporter. His retirement will be a particular surprise to those undergraduates from outside points who will come back in the Fall to continue their studies and will find that Dr. Thayer is no longer to direct their work. He is succeeded by Dr. F. N. Briggs.

The medical school owes much to Dr. Thayer. When asked about his connection with it Dr. Thayer modestly says that in 1893 he "assisted in establishing" that institution. As a matter of fact he founded and supported it for three years, for it was taken over by the College proper.

Three Strenuous Years.

In 1893 Dr. Thayer approached President Capen and the Tufts College trustees with a proposition that a Tufts College medical school be established. After much deliberation the trustees, urged by President Capen, decided that, if Dr. Thayer would start such a school and be responsible for it for three years, the College would allow him to use the College name. If at the end of the three years, this medical school was successful, the College would take it over.

For three strenuous years Dr. Thayer supported this school by his own funds and, as a matter of fact, undermined his health, looking after the endless details of the institution's work. At the end of the three years the College gladly took over the school. Thayer being continued, of course, as secretary, chief executive and professor of anatomy.

Counsellor of Thousands.

For twelve years he has been the head and front of the medical school, has become the friend and counsellor of thousands of ambitious young men and women and is loved and revered by them for his personality, as well as admired for his abilities as an instructor and administrator.

Dr. Thayer was born in West Randolph, Vt., in 1844, a lineal descendant of John Alden and of Elder William Brewster. He graduated at Norwich, Vt., in the University of Vermont, which he entered in 1862. He served during the Civil War and was a hospital steward at Gettysburg.

He returned to the University of Vermont and was graduated from its medical department in 1865. He took a post-graduate course at the College of Physicians and Surgeons of New York and at the Harvard Medical School. For four years he was physician and surgeon to the Northern Pacific Railroad. He settled in Boston in 1878.

He is a Mason of high standing, attaining the Egyptian rite. He is a member of several professional, collegiate and veteran organizations.

EXTENDS GREETING AND A FAREWELL

Henry Siegel went to New York last Thursday before Mr and Mrs. Frank Vogel of No. 16 Seventy-sixth street, who returned on the Cunard steamship Caronia from a two weeks' automobile trip extending through France, Germany and Italy, and to say goodby to his friend, Sir Joseph D. Maclay, M. P., of London, who sailed in the White Star liner Celtic Friday.

Sir Joseph was the attractive and interesting central figure of an impromptu party of distinguished men, including Judge Alton B. Parker, who on Wednesday evening at the Manhattan club. He was delighted with the reception which he met with while in Boston. As he boarded the Celtic he declared that like unto Reverend Sam, where he dined with Mr. Siegel and a choice company of congenial spirits, would long linger a green spot in his memory. Sir Joseph parted with Mr. Siegel at the gangway. Sir Joseph and Lady Maclay will join Mr. and Mrs. Siegel's party for an automobile tour of Italy next February. Mrs. Siegel has recently entertained in London by Ambassador and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid and also in Berlin. She will shortly rejoin Mr Siegel, who returns to Boston to-morrow.

SAYS WOMAN THREE WEEKS DEAD WILL RISE AGAIN.

Aged Holy Ghoster Bitterly Cried to God Nerunta Wh Sister Rodman Died—But On Now Alive of Mystic Bod

By Boston American Leased Wire.

Philadelphia, Aug. 5.—"She die three weeks ago. She will be resurrected in two weeks more, and people will come from all over the earth and will believe. Until then, no one shall enter this house."

This is the fiat issued by aged Mrs. Lang as she leans from an upper window of the "Holy Ghost House" at No. 1,328 South Eleventh street and harangues a crowd below.

In a rear room of the house lie dead body of Mrs. Rudman has laid for nearly a month.

Mrs. Lang and Mrs. Rudman were members of the Holy Ghost society, a mystic organization founded in 1855 by a Miss Merriton. There were once seventy members, but after Miss Merriton's death the members dwindled until Mrs. Lang and Mrs. Rudman lived alone in the old mansion. The former is eighty, the latter was seventy-five.

Rumor of Death.

About three weeks ago the rumor spread through the neighborhood that Mrs. Rudman had died. When Mrs. Lang was questioned she at first denied the fact, but later when the truth could no longer be hidden, she admitted that her companion was dead. She has barricaded the house and declared that in another fortnight Mrs. Rudman will arise again.

The neighbors have noticed the pollr, who refuse to break into the house until the Health Inspectors authorize such a act. Meantime Mrs. Lang makes oral addresses as the following to the curious crowds that collect before her windows:

"I cried bitterly to God Nerunta, when sister Rodman died. When God Nerunta was among us, before sin was poison in 1885, she swore we daughters of the Holy Ghost should never part. We never did. God Nerunta still lives and talk with me. So does Sister Rudman.

"In two weeks Sister Rudman will arise and glorify. Until then I cannot leave this house, even in search of food and drink, for we can surpass eter it. Until my visit endures, God Nerunta gives me spiritual food and drink that mortals can not see."

Both Mrs. Lang and Mrs. Rudman deserted husbands and homes to join the society.

Irving Bigelow, by F. A. Stewart, operative for Bissonette Studio, Roxbury; Competitive Class.

They Will Gather in Mechanics' Hall This Week at Quarter-Centennial Convention.

Took pleasant, please!

Two thousand of the leading photographers in the United States, Canada, Mexico and South American countries will be represented in Boston this week from Tuesday until Saturday, the occasion being the quarter-centennial convention of the Photographers' Association of America. It is the first time in fifteen years that Boston has had the pleasure of entertaining these camera men. All meetings and lectures will be held in Paul Revere Hall, Mechanics' building.

Between 3,000 and 4,000 portraits, perhaps the finest collection ever shown under one roof in the world, will be exhibited in Mechanics Hall. The best work in the country will be shown. Sixteen hundred dollars in money prizes is offered. The rivalry is keener this year than ever. More portraits will be shown and the standard of excellence will be much higher than in any former year.

Work From Germany and England.

Complimentary exhibits have been sent from Germany and England. Several European photographers will be present at the convention for the purpose of viewing the exhibit and to secure pointers on American ideas and methods.

Pictures in the competitive class will not be stamped or signed in any manner in order that no favoritism shall be shown by the judges, whose names will not be announced until the convention is under way. In addition to prizes, certificates of merit will be issued to work of superior standard.

One of the most pleasing features of the exhibit will be a carefully selected outdoor photographs of paintings by the masters, obtained through the courtesy of Wilfred French of the Photo-Era, the association's official organ. It was hoped the public might be admitted on the last day, but because of the crowded condition it is uncertain whether this will be carried out.

Manufacturers and dealers in photographic supplies in connection with the convention.

In view of the fact that many of the photographers will bring their wives or daughters, a special committee of women will give special attention to the visiting ladies' entertainment.

Those who serve on the committee are Mrs. H. A. Cobb, chairman; Miss N. J. Hall, secretary; Mrs. F. H. Barrows, treasurer; Mrs. Benjamin Kreger, Mrs. George M. Boston and Mrs. F. H. Packard.

Welcomed by Mr. Guild.

The convention will open Tuesday morning at 9:30 o'clock in Paul Revere Hall, with an address of welcome by Lieutenant Governor Guild. The response will be made by Morris Barker Parkinson, of Boston. Other addresses will follow.

In the afternoon there will be a special trip by electric cars to Lexington, the historic points, while the men continue their meetings. A reception to officers of the association has been arranged for the evening.

A number of educational lectures will be given by leaders of the profession during the week. Wednesday night there will be an electric event in Paul Revere Hall, while for Thursday night a concert has been arranged. Manufacturers and dealers will give demonstrations on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. Officers will be elected Friday. In the evening a moonlight sail to Nantasket will be indulged in, with an old-fashioned New England shore dinner at the other end. Ferguson Park will be visited as a climax to the evening's amusement.

GRAND TRUNK PLAN APPROVED BY CABINET.

New Road to the West Will Almost Parallel Iron of the Great Canadian Pacific Route of Railroad Magnates

Ottawa, Ont., Aug. 5.—The plans of Grand Trunk entire for construction of trunk road from Portage La Prairie, 57 miles westward, have been approved by the Cabinet. From Portage La Prairie the Grand Trunk Pacific will extend through the province of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta to a point a little west of Macleod. It then proceeds in a straight line west to Asses' home River. It runs about half way between Macleod and the Northwestern and Canadian Pacific line, for some distance west of McGregor. It is located between twelve and fourteen miles north of them. It runs a little south of Rapid City, where will be a city of Brandon.

The Grand Trunk Pacific will cross Arthur River about 25 miles, then run west to Aesiniboine River near Oak Lake and west to Pawaska's Range 18, and crosses the second meridian a little north of Number politicians—"the good ones," he says—relative the disposition of certain of the cases that arise before him. He will be heard. He will be consulted. He will be listened.

These are the things he promises to do during the few months for which he has been appointed, and during the year to come, if he is elected to the office in the fall.

Mr. Joel J. Sughrue was this week appointed District Attorney to succeed Official Moran, who has held the office many years. Mr. Sughrue is a candidate for the Democratic nomination for October. He told me, informally, pleasantly, earnestly, yet strong in his views, what he thinks what his holding of the position means—what his purpose to do with the trust that has been reposed in him.

"I desire to be the local district attorney," said Mr. Sughrue, "to enforce the law so as to confer the greatest benefit to the community, and the least injury to the individual. He should save as many lives as he can from being forever wrecked by imprisonment. He should be as merciful as a wise administration of the law will admit. He should be honest.

The new District Attorney is big and pleasant. He is tall and, without being fat, is plainly built. His hair is gray. His cropped moustache is gray. His Sunday suit, very properly pressed and pressed, is gray. His eyes are brown and strong. His voice is soft, with a quality of that indicates it could become very hard. His manner is that of conversation. He is a better looking man than his pictures. Indeed, history for the ten years he has been second and first assistant District Attorney "hasn't prepared him to an extent as justice to the community will allow."

He has tried many thousands of cases. "I feel that I have made no deadly enemies," he says. "I have tried to do my duty; to convict the guilty and free the innocent, and help the falling.

"I never send a boy to prison if I can help it," he said "not a young man or woman, nor a person with a family. I mean by that I do not send them to prison if the character of their crime will permit any doubt of their position and there be any indication that they will reform if they can be given it.

"You are a believer in the probation of prisoners?

"Heartily. And our courts are believers in it, too. The probation system is constantly being extended. It should be extended even further than it is to-day. A tremendous proportion of those who would otherwise become confirmed lawbreakers are saved by the probation law. And the action of prisoners is carried on with great efficiency in Massachusetts.

"It is the tendency of the Massachusetts bench to incline toward mercy as much mercy as is consistent with the interests of the community.

"How many cases do a year office has die a year?

"From 3,500 to 4,000. That is the number of cases that come here. Not more than 600 are tried—there isn't time. The others we have to dispose of here."

"How do you do it?"

"We learn what we can about those accused. We have assistance, frequently from men outside the office. People who know about the circumstances tell us, and we are able to be guided by their judgment.

Politics Again.

I left again to pull him to speak of politics. It was useless. Entirely unwilling to criticise or praise, and insistent that what they have done was not for him to do, District Attorney Sughrue would speak of nothing more that had to do with matters of methods.

Then, then, I suffer to be the platform upon which he proposes to stand before the men of Boston. Winthrop, Revere and Hall for election in the autumn. He says he is pal

Good Men in Politics.

"You often hear. There are many good men in politics. They know their constituents. Often they are wise, just and charitable. They know the needs, the temptations, the sorrows, the desires of the men in their districts. They are able to feel as these people feel, being guided by them, are able in many cases to avoid them. How they go astray.

"Sometimes there is a real temptation for a good person which prevents one of the principal causes of their downfall.

"So I say in politics renders a good service to the community in such way to an extent not to be paid man a lawyer.

I left again to pull him to speak of politics. It was useless. Entirely unwilling to criticise or praise, and insistent that what they have done was not for him to do, District Attorney Sughrue would speak of nothing more that had to do with matters of methods.

WEST VIRGINIA MAKES 21 KNOTS

New York, Aug. 5.—The armored cruiser West Virginia came into port and anchored off Tompkinsville. After leaving Newport for two days she made a test of speed, under forced draught. She made 21½ knots under a considerable handicap. On her trial trip she exceeded 21 knots. She has been in the water eight months and has taken on a growth of barnacles, which materially affected her speed. In addition to this drawback, the cruiser came up from Newport sixty-three miles short in her engine force. Her complement for the engine-room crew is 283 men.

The work of the cruiser under the circumstances was considered favorable.

REPUBLIC BRINGS 728 PASSENGERS

The White Star liner Republic, which sailed July 28 from Liverpool, arrived in port yesterday afternoon. She had on board 212 saloon, 174 second cabin and 342 steerage passengers, the greater number of whom were citizens of this country.

Among the saloon passengers was Rev. James A. Traynor, a well-known Irish priest and patriot. He would not state what was the object of his visit. Father Traynor was accompanied by other Irish clergymen.

Mr. E. M. Holland, the actor, with Mrs. Holland, Master Joseph Holland and Miss Irene Holland returned from England.

Also in the saloon list was Captain John McAuley's last voyage in the Republic, as he is to be given command of the Cretic in the White Star—New York and Mediterranean service.

PEACHES FLOURISH WITH DRY SEASON

Hartford, Ct., Aug. 5.—The Connecticut peach crop this year will be the largest ever harvested and of unusually fine quality, in the opinion of J. H. Hale, a prominent grower.

Some of the early fruit will be marketed next week, but the biggest yield will be during the first two weeks of September. In the Glastonbury district the set of fruit on peaches was so large this year that growers have had to keep men busy partly stripping the trees to give the remaining fruit a chance to grow and ripen. The fact that this district has had very little rain during the several weeks is regarded as a happy circumstance by the growers, as a drought adds flavor and color to the fruit.

10,000 HARVEST MEN CALLED FOR

St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 5.—Nearly 10,000 harvest hands are needed in the Northwest, according to the circular issued today by the Northern Pacific Railroad. Wages range from $1.75 to $2.50 a day.

The towns wanting the largest number of men are Grand Forks, 3,000; Fargo, 1,000; McHenry, 400; Jessie, Rhinelander, Moorhead, Grafton, Hannaford and Dacey, 300 each.

REALTY MARKET FEELS EFFECT OF SUMMER.

For the First Time Since Early Spring the Real Estate Business Has Been Marked by Warm Weather Dulness

NUMBER OF RECORDED TRANSFERS FELL OFF

Market by No Means Stagnant, but Transactions Have Been Fewer, Suburban Property Being the Most Active

Dulness marked the realty field during the past week for the first time since early Spring. Anticipated apathy, awaited for weeks, has not yet [illegible], and business has been by no means stagnant. The case is simply one of an unusually good market feeling the effects, much later than had been [illegible], of a natural approach to [illegible]. Transfers recorded last week were fewer in number than those of the preceding week, but a fair amount of deals were made. Suburban property exceeded city realty in number of transactions.

George Wheatland has sold to Charles R. Marsh, on private terms, the new estate numbered 169 Bay State road, Back Bay, on the water side, between Sherborn and Granby streets. This property consists of a four-story, light stone and red brick dwelling, 22 by 65 feet in dimensions, and 2,700 square feet of land, all taxed on $27,000. It adjoins the house recently sold to O. S. Godfrey, and is one of a block of six houses built by Mr. Wheatland on that side of the road. The price paid was considerably in advance of the assessed valuation. The new owner has negotiated a lease of the premises to a client who will take possession on September 1. T. Dennie Boardman and Reginald Boardman were the brokers.

North and West End Sales.

Agreement papers have been signed in the office of Henry W. Savage for the sale of the property numbered 19 Pitts street, West End, belonging to Cora E. Hilton. It consists of a three and one-half story brick dwelling house and 1,693 square feet of land, all assessed on $9,900, of which $6,000 is on the land. The purchaser, whose name is withheld until the final papers are passed, buys for improvement.

Through the same agency agreements have been signed for the sale of two parcels [illegible] belonging to [illegible]. One parcel consists of a three and one-half story brick dwelling house, and the other of a three and one-half story frame dwelling with 1,525 square feet of land. # CONSUELO COMING SEPT. 15, BUT DUKE STAYS AT HOME

THE DUCHESS of MARLBOROUGH

American Duchess Who Is to Visit Her Relatives in This Country During Month of September.

Marlborough, Piqued at Senior Vanderbilt, Will Not Come With Duchess on Newport Visit.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

New York, Aug. 5.—The beautiful Duchess of Marlborough, who was Consuelo Vanderbilt, daughter of William K. Vanderbilt, is preparing for another visit to New York and Newport. With her children and her brother, Harold Vanderbilt, she will sail from Liverpool for New York on September 15.

The Duke will not accompany her. Her two boys, the Marquis of Blandford and Lord Ivor Churchill, are manly little fellows and great favorites with her relatives in the United States, as well as with the Duke's relations in England. They will be with her here in Newport.

A season of social gaiety will be inaugurated upon her arrival. The Duchess will go first to Great Neck, L. I., to Deepdale, the home of her brother, William K. Vanderbilt, Jr. She will spend several weeks there and will then go to Newport, remaining there until the close of the season before returning.

Harold Vanderbilt, the youngest member of the family, sailed for England two weeks ago to accompany his sister back. It was well known that the Duke would not accompany her, as he is averse to visiting America and particularly his American relatives by marriage. This aversion is said to have begun when his father-in-law, William K. Vanderbilt, married a second time, and the liberal allowance which he had made to the Marlboroughs up to that time, supplementing the marriage dower of $3,000,000, abruptly ceased.

FINANCIAL NOTES.

The Consolidated Gas Company of New York has declared the regular quarterly dividend of two per cent payable September 15. Books close August 25 and reopen September 16.

Total clearing house returns for the past week amounted to $2,495,830,627, as compared with $1,700,724,487 for the corresponding week of last year, an increase of 39.4 per cent.

The Boston Chamber of Commerce announces a reduction in flour prices of from 10 to 15 cents. Spring wheat patents were lowered 10 cents, and a 15-cent cut was made in Winter wheat patents.

The Detroit United Railway has applied to the New York Stock Exchange to list $7,392,000 additional consolidated 4½ per cent. bonds of 1932. The Western Maryland has applied to list $1,402,000 additional first mortgage 4 per cent. bonds of 1952. The Buffalo & Susquehanna has applied to list $2,210,000 additional first refunding 4½ per cent bonds of 1951.

The stockholders of the Corn Products Company have formed a committee to investigate the affairs of the corporation and request a detailed statement in writing of the officers of the company, to be presented to stock and bond holders on August 9.

A director of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company says that the earnings of the company this Summer are the largest in its history and that prospects for the future are excellent. The Interborough has been a benefit to the company by reducing long distance travel and increasing short distance travel.

In connection with the recent advance in Allis-Chalmers stock the old rumor has been revived that the General Electric Company is about to purchase that concern. The rumor has been denied by officials of both companies.

The local bond market for the past few weeks has been without feature. Outside of one or two possible exceptions all the local houses report an extremely narrow market with slight activity confined to specialties. According to the United States Investor the bond sales in the general market for the month of July amounted to $10,880,111. Of this amount $8,978,000 was issued by cities and towns and $1,906,000 by counties.

BULLS ROUNDED UP IN CLOSE MARKET.

Strength of Stocks Will Not Be Denied, but Inactivity Again Commands a Sharp Halt on Any Upward Movement.

DEVELOPMENTS SHOW CONTINUED FIRMNESS

Higher Prices Are Indicated, but Midsummer Dullness Is to Have Its Way—Coppers Have Boom All Their Own.

A narrow stock market, strong in some spots and irregular in others has prevailed thus far this month in spite of the many predictions that August would surely inaugurate the bull movement, which still seems to be pending.

It is still a traders' market, so called, but its strength will not yet allow itself to be denied. There has been no news of unfavorable character. Such as has developed has been conducive to higher prices. Earnings of the companies whose stocks are dealt in on the Boston and New York Stock Exchanges continue flourishing, and the bear talk regarding the crops has practically ceased. Some few stocks reached new high records during the week in Wall street, and in Boston the coppers continued the little boom of their own.

United States Steel preferred, Canadian Pacific, Jersey Central and American Smelting exceeded their previous high levels but did not hold the advance. In a rush to take profits when the high figures were reached, the issues broke slightly. These and other stocks, however, reflecting the steady upswing of prices which has been going on for some weeks, lend distinct encouragement to the situation. A number of stocks are from four to ten points above where they were not over two months ago. The Steels, Union Pacific, Reading, Amalgamated and others of the market leaders show to-day the result of a bull movement with frequent recessions for profit-taking. The bulls seem strongly entrenched against the intermittent attacks of the bears, and no opportunity is lost to restore the sentiment in favor of bull speculation.

Increased Commissions.

Wall Street reports increased commission business. This is eagerly seized upon by those interested as indicating a coming reappearance of the public into the speculation. The volume of trading continues small, but at this time of year this point is only natural. Midsummer dulness is not prevailing, and considering the time of year, what activity exists is an object of congratulation. An advance is expected to commence during the second half of August. Those who have been optimists during the upswing of the past weeks are optimists still. They are predicting a bull movement for the Fall. Stocks are not for sale at present in large quantity. Combined with the natural and seasonable dulness this fact prevents activity now. Prices advance, however, whenever there is trading. Investors inspired by the remarkable forces working for enhancement maintain a stalwart hold upon their securities.

The general business outlook at this time is unusually free from the clouds of doubt and distress. The crop outlook is that an enormous volume of trade will be sustained throughout the country. In the West business is more prosperous than ever before. Big business men have placed orders in their lines for delivery months ahead. "We don't have to worry," they say.

Conditions Never Better.

President Mitchell of the Illinois State Trust Company is quoted as saying that crop and industrial conditions were never better. Mr. Mitchell's opinions are respected in the East. He foresaw the slump of 1903 and his institution is credited with having sold great blocks of securities in anticipation of the crash. He is now quoted as conservatively bullish on the situation.

All these conditions and facts cannot but redound to the credit of business and finance. The increase in credit means restoration of confidence and resulting higher prices. Profit taking will go on as usual, and stocks will be manipulated for ever. The consequent ups and downs will occur, for a steady advance cannot last forever. Those looking for profit on turns from day to day or week to week will do well, therefore, to take quick advantage of their opportunities.

Price movements the coming week will probably be irregular and within narrow limits. On all recessions a remarkable buying power sets in and prevents the dislodging of long stock, and discourages the bearish efforts to depress prices. To some people present prices look high, but this height is really in comparison with the level of a year ago. Measured by intrinsic values stocks are as cheap now as they were in the Summer of 1904. Railroad earnings are of larger volume than they were last year.

Increased Dividends.

Several of the leading systems have increased their rate of dividends, and indications are that before the end of this bull market is reached others will be paying higher rates. Industrial preferred stocks which were uncertain of their dividends twelve months ago, are now classed with sound investments. Certain common stocks which were ignored not long since are now being bought for nothing more than their prospective returns.

The prospect of higher money rates forms a faint cloud on the speculative horizon. No stringency is expected, however, in spite of the rather poor character of the bank statements from week to week. When the crop moving season begins the banks will, of course, have to ship great amounts of currency to the West. Until the return flow commences money will probably be a little higher, but the flow from East to West each year is now become so well known as to be discounted and prepared for in advance. It creates harder rates, but as the time of the return flow can be foretold with reasonable certainty no discomfort should occur.

The statement of the New York banks yesterday showed that the surplus reserve decreased $3,142,450, and now stands at $12,163,525. The decrease in the surplus was caused by a loss of $3,800,000. Loans increased only $1,816,300. Deposits decreased $2,618,600. The total reserve now amounts to $311,443,100. The statement had little or no effect on the trading in New York, which became dull shortly after the opening and remained extremely dull up to the close, which came dull and irregular.

Amalgamated Closes Up.

Amalgamated closed in New York at 84, up ⅛. Reading gained ¼ to 100⅞, American Smelting lost ⅛ to 127⅝. Union Pacific was off ¼ to 130¾. Brooklyn Transit lost ½ to 69½, and Steel Preferred gained ⅛ to 104⅛. In Boston the market closed heavy. Copper Range was off ⅝ to 70, Allouez lost ⅞ to 32¾. Shoe Machinery gained 1 to 77. Massachusetts Gas was off ⅝ to 46¾. American Woolen was unchanged at 37½.

An attempt was made yesterday to depress prices, but in view of the fractional nature of the prices it was evident that the attempt was a failure. The London Stock Exchange was closed and will not re-open until Tuesday. Arbitrage orders were lacking, therefore, and no indication came from London to affect prices.

Manipulation in Copper Range was continued in Boston yesterday, but aside from the dealings in this issue the copper shares showed few features. The market, however, was about all that could be expected during midsummer in Boston. Copper Range fluctuated around 70, within a fraction, finally closing at that figure with a loss of ⅝. Floor brokers are of the opinion that the recent selling of Copper Range has been caused by a release of the Burrage-Lawson stock which was held in the Copper Range treasury against the debt of the Trimountain. Rumors to this effect have been persistent and in some quarters have been caused by a belief that Henry H. Rogers has helped the release. As yet, however, the reports have been unconfirmed.

Holding Advance.

As for Amalgamated, the reports of the excellent condition of the company are doing little except to hold the advance of the last few weeks. The property is being directed by some of the shrewdest business minds in the country and what success they have attained is founded on commercial ability of the highest order. With the present 5 per cent. dividend rate the stock should remain around 85 or even 90.

Regarding copper in general, one of Boston's prominent bankers says that in some respects he is sorry to see the metal market at its present high level, with the indications that copper will soon sell at sixteen cents. This price for copper, nevertheless, encourages production even while it curtails consumption. The metal is an increasingly necessary commodity, and it is long since the legitimate demand from consumers has been as large and as urgent as at present, or when consumers have been obliged to calculate as closely how to meet the demands being made on them. For this reason the copper market is one of the most remarkable the trade has seen in years. The leading producing interests are so well sold up that it has become a question whether they may not suddenly find that the market has passed beyond their control. The prices which would then prevail would be reflected in the price of the copper shares and another boom would result.

RALLYING ROUND STEEL SHARES

"Steel" is the war cry of the bull party for the next few days. The signal was given when the preferred stock sold at 105, a new high record, the last transaction recorded on the tape for yesterday.

The campaign includes the independent issues as well as those of the trust. The thing is based on a belief that steel preferred will be able to pay dividends indefinitely, and that it should be forced to a price in keeping with its intrinsic worth. Business is good in steel, and it is really better than if it were larger, for there is nothing strained about the situation. All the steel that is being purchased is for present needs.

There is now wild booming, and indications are for a continued consumption at the present rate. Developments in the direction of structural material is pleasing to steel men. Lumber is becoming scarcer and higher prices from day to day, and the use of steel in ordinary buildings is becoming a custom. This opens up an enormous market. The population of the United States is growing so rapidly that it is calculated at least 250,000 new dwellings are needed every year to house them. This does not take into account the new dwellings erected to replace old ones. Thus steel has entered into the very soul of the people, and with the popularity of the metal it is believed the stock will become the popular rage once more. Most of them are now so high that they promise small profits, and that is just where the dear public loves to buy. The first class railroad stocks are also to be held high from day to day, according to the best informed brokers.

BELOW you will find the second part or trio of the famous "Trip to Niagara" march that is the rage of the country at the present time. We have sold over 300,000 copies of this march up to date, and can safely say it will be the instrumental march HIT of the season.

This piece is very similar to the renowned "Chariot Race" march, and from present indications will surpass it in popularity.

WOMAN OF 103 AND MAN OF 93 TELL SECRET OF LONG LIFE

Would You Grow Old? Live Simply and Stop Worrying, Is Their Advice.

"Work Hard, Don't Worry," Means a Hearty Old Age

Mrs. Johanna Harper-Brown, One Hundred and Three, Says:

Don't worry.
Work hard.
Go to bed before 7 p. m.
Don't eat breakfast foods.
Don't smoke, drink or lead an immoral life.
Girls should go to theatres and dances less.
Everybody should go to church.
If married, have a big family.

Daniel Farnsworth, Who Is Ninety-Three, Says:

Don't be too anxious to live too long.
Get up with the sun.
Take thirty minutes' nap after dinner.
Work hard.
Avoid fancy cooking.
Don't smoke cigarettes.
Don't smoke tobacco much.
Better let liquor alone.
Early night sleep is better than late morning sleep.

"Work hard. Live simply and don't worry," is the tenor of advice given by two of the oldest people in New England to-day.

In Worcester Mrs. Johanna Harper-Brown, who is about to celebrate her one hundred and third birthday, says "Don't worry."

Up in Claremont, N. H., lives a man named Daniel Farnsworth, nearly ninety three years old, hale and hearty. And he, with unconscious humor, gives this advice:

"Don't be too anxious to live long if you would reach great age."

Mr. Farnsworth appreciates that this advice from a nonagenarian is peculiar but he never worried about how long he was to live, so he is living yet.

Both these old people also agree that early rising and retiring, plain food, simple life and hard work are other requisites for longevity

WORRY THE DISEASE THAT KILLS, SAYS MRS. HARPER BROWN

Worcester, Aug. 5.—"Don't worry. That is a secret of long life," says Mrs. Johanna Harper-Brown, who will celebrate her 103d birthday on August 18.

"How have I managed to live so long?" said Mrs. Brown with a smile to-day. "Why, I haven't worried. I have lived regularly and worked hard."

Mrs. Brown was born in Montreal and came to this city when twenty-six years old. She has seen five generations of her family come and pass away. She is by no means helpless to-day. She enjoys life and has very positive ideas as to the way to live.

"To begin with," she says, "you must go to bed certainly before 7 o'clock at night. Eat breakfast soon after getting up. Do not eat any of the breakfast foods. They do not amount to much. Eat toast and eggs and coffee.

"Work hard during the forenoon, take a hearty dinner. Work hard in the afternoon. Eat a hearty supper.

"Don't smoke. Don't drink. Don't lead an immoral life. You should go to the theatre but rarely. They should dance less than they do. Everybody should go to church regularly, and under no circumstances should they worry. Worry is the disease that kills more people than does yellow fever or consumption. For married people I prefer large families.

"The girls and boys of to-day have too easy a time. I am afraid it is because years from now they will be even worse. I dread the results of such freedom on the coming generations."

GET UP WITH THE SUN AND WORK HARD, SAYS NONAGENARIAN

Special to the Boston American.

Claremont, N. H., Aug. 5.—"Don't worry about how long you're going to live and then you'll live longer," says sturdy Daniel Farnsworth, nearly ninety-three years old and able to work hard now

"I am almost ninety-three and I feel nearly as well and strong as I did twenty years ago. I helped plant this big rye I raise on the farm. I guess the old man can keep some of the young fellows busy to follow him hoeing.

"How do I do it? I get up with the sun, and I always have. I might say that I have always gone to bed with the sun. Four in the morning finds me doing chores in the garden. At 6 I have breakfast. At 12 I eat dinner and then I take a thirty-minute nap, no more, no less.

"I go to work again, quit at 6 30, eat supper, finish up the chores and then 8 o'clock finds me asleep in bed.

"I don't want too much fancy cooking. The good, old fashioned meat and potatoes with a chicken and a few fresh eggs thrown in, are good enough for me. It's the fodder that makes you strong. It stays by you till the next meal.

"I never used tobacco but once. I did use snuff for a short time, but quit. I'm not a judge of liquor, as I never had much experience with it. I did drink now and then when I was a young man working in the hay fields. I was fortunate to have the rum was good in those days and we only had to pay 25 cents a gallon for it.

"I don't suppose the boys of to-day want my advice from an old fellow like me, but let them give up the fancy cigarettes. They are like too much sun on a garden. They dry you all up. And for that matter I don't think tobacco in any form is a benefit. It destroys the nerves and when those are gone you might as well hang up your hoe and let the garden go to weeds. For you are all gone."

JOHN MITCHELL HAS NO INTENTION OF RESIGNING.

When Miners' Leader Said He Might Leave the Union He Meant That He Feared Ill-Health Would Drive Him Out

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Aug. 5.—President John Mitchell of the United Mine Workers, in explaining an assertion made at a recent mass meeting at Glidnark which many construed as meaning that he might resign the presidency of the unio, says:

"In saying that I might not be long with the workers, I added that I could not be with the union forever, as death or ill health or some other cause might force me to leave. I have no plans at all at present that would make me think of leaving the United Mine Workers, and my intention is to strive just as hard in the future as in the past to better the conditions of the men who are employed in and about the mines. I certainly am not considering leaving the organization."

In an address at Archbald he told the mine workers he did not know how long he would have the strength to continue in the work was assigned him, the special privileges particularly irritating to his health, but he would continue it still in the interests of the mine workers as long as he had the ability to do so.

YOUNG MEN GUILTY OF JULY 4 BLAZE

Georgetown, Aug. 5.—Five well-known young men of this town pleaded guilty in the District Court to-day of the charge of negligently setting a fire on July 4 near buildings in which people lived. They are Arthur H. Robinson, Harold E. Jewett, Joseph L. Noyes, Irving C. Hill and Frank E. Mosher.

The case was conducted by the State Fire Marshall's Office, Deputy Fire Marshal Casey appearing in court for the government. Fire Marshall Tower visited the men held for arrest. Jewett, it is said, could not weigh them to get a criminal record.

Finally the judge and Fire Marshal came to a conference, and when they came back out against them, the men pleaded guilty and their cases were continued.

STOP POOL-SELLING AT OREGON TRACKS

Portland, Ore., Aug. 5.—Circuit Judge Frazier granted an injunction to-day stopping pool selling at the Irvington race track, holding it in violation of the State laws. It will probably result in the abandonment of racing in Oregon.

VIENNA PLAYWRIGHT DEAD

RIVAL LOGGERS AT NIGHT WRECK DAM WITH DYNAMITE.

Twenty Men Ordered to Protect Property During Lumber War in Maine—Gates Mended With Boughs and Dirt

Bangor, Me., Aug. 5.—According to reports from Chamberlain Lake, a party of men, supposed to be in the employ of St. John River lumbering company, went to the Lake Wednesday night and blew up three of dynamite on the Telos dam. They went away immediately. The gates were not seriously damaged by the two explosions and did so that the water is now being held back with the help of only a few men.

The Telos Branch Improvement Company has twenty men on the spot, and they have been instructed by Fred W. Ayer of Bangor, president of the company to protect the dam. The men in charge regard as having serious possibilities.

If it is not Allen River men return with reinforcements there will undoubtedly be a fight.

This far no call for protection has been made upon the State.

The trouble arises from the fact that Chamberlain lake has two outlets, one down the Allegash to the St. John River and the other to the east branch of the Penobscot. The dam, upon the breaking of which prevents a good deal of water from going down the St. John, diverting it to the east branch.

The water is extremely valuable at this season of the year, when lumbermen are driving logs down the streams and each side of St. John lumbermen are driving logs down the lake and the opposite side and being held the water. If the dam at Chamberlain lake could be removed, the greater part of the water would go into the St. John and their driving operations would be largely facilitated.

RUNAWAY OF EIGHT HAS FUTURE AS A ROMANCIST.

Lynn Child Touched Policeman's Heart with Tale That She Had Been Here Two Days and Had Lost Her Parents

The eight-year-old girl who was found at Rowe's wharf by Patrolman Dolan and who told him she was an English immigrant who had become separated from her parents, was found yesterday to be a little Lynn girl who has a habit of running away from home and weaving romance into her history. She is Lillian Crescent, daughter of James Crescent of No. 378 Chestnut street.

"My name is Lillian Creswell," she told Patrolman Dolan. "I came here with papa and mamma two days ago from England and I've lost 'em."

She was taken to the Chardon Street Home and the story was published in the morning papers. Yesterday Mr. Crescent arrived from Lynn, having read the "Lillian Creswell" story and recognized it at once as one of his little girl's self-made bits of history.

He explained that Lillian went out to play, had fifty cents in her pocket and started on the "Narrow Gauge" to see the wide, wide world. She came to Boston, wandered about a few hours and was on her way back to the station when Dolan found her.

SALVATIONISTS TO HEAR MISS BOOTH

South Framingham, Aug. 5.—Officers and soldiers of the New England Salvation Army at Montwait are to-day making preparations for meeting the closing day of the twentieth annual camp-meeting. Captain McMullen conducted the 'open drill. The last of the Chautauqua gatherings was held in Normal Hall. Sign Mellen spoke on "Wearing of the Uniform." Staff Captain Higgins' "Importance of Holiness" meeting and Colonel Booth's remarks formally closed the Chautauqua until another year. Commander Miss Booth-Clibborn, head of the Salvation Army forces in America, is expected to-night, and will speak at 2 p. m. and 8 p. m. to-morrow.

Soiled Waists Absurdly Priced

Muslin Underwear Dept.

At stock-taking, and the critical examination of merchandise that this implies, quite a quantity of waists were found that, because of soiling and mussing, will not pass muster. Most of them could be worn a time or two without laundering, so little are they affected; others will need to be laundered at once. Prices in many instances are very much less than half.

POSSE OF 1,000 TODAY TO SEEK MISSING TUCKER GIRL

POINTS IN EAST ROCHESTER, AND SOUTH LEBANON, WHERE MISS TUCKER HAS BEEN TRACED

PHOTOGRAPHED BY BOSTON AMERICAN STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER.

Party of 300 Baffled in All Day Quest of Miss Mary A. Tucker Near South Lebanon, Me.

ROCHESTER, N. H., Aug 5.—Weary from miles of tramping through dense woods that were at times almost impassable, the searchers for Miss Mary A. Tucker, the missing Providence school teacher who disappeared from Camp Ossipee July 25, reported back at the East Rochster Hotel to-night that they had found not the slightest clue. Miss Tucker is the daughter of Mrs. Faunce, wife of the Rev. David W. Faunce and step-sister of President Faunce of Boston University.

Prepared for this unsatisfactory news, M. W. Eastman, who is directing the search, had made arrangements for a larger and better equippd party to make a more careful investigation of the fourteen miles of woods on Sunday. He can use 1,000 men if they can be brought out.

Everyone in Rochester, East Rochester, South Lebanon, Me., and West Lebanon has been invited to become a member of the big searching party. Circulars announcing the reward were distributed through all these towns this afternoon.

TO USE DOGS IN SEARCH.

The start is ordered for 8.30 o'clock from the East Rochester Hotel. Dogs of all breeds will be brought along and loosened in the woods near which Miss Tucker was last seen.

The search will be taken up in Somersworth where Mrs. I. F. Ryan and Mrs. Anna Kidler reported having seen a woman on the Salmon Falls road last Friday night who answered the description of Miss Tucker. City Marshal Andrews, who was out to-day looking up the clew, failed to find any further trace of the woman.

Both Mrs. Ryan and Mrs. Kidler say that the woman they saw wore a dark blue skirt and a light waist with a light slouch hat.

She disappeared across a field and was noticed taking down a pair of bars.

Leonard Goodwin of East Rochester believes that he saw Miss Tucker a week ago to-day at Stevens Pond. Mr. Goodwin was fishing and noticed the woman seated on a stone not far away. Mr. Goodwin believed that she was one of the Summer boarders and paid no further attention to her.

Nevertheless particular attention was paid to the vicinity of Stevens Pond today. The searchers found no trace.

Find Another Missing Woman.

It has been ascertained that the woman who spent the night at the house of Frank Boynton in Holderness, N. H., is Miss Eva H. Colby of No. 271 Portland street, Haverhill. Miss Colby has been missing for three weeks. She was formerly employed in the public library in that city and lived alone.

Through the BOSTON AMERICAN friends of Miss Colby learned that she had been taken for Miss Tucker and immediately telegraphed that they would come to Holderness for her.

Another man has placed Miss Tucker or a woman who closely answers her description in the vicinity of East Rochester a week ago Friday. Charles Magoun, a shoemaker, told a BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter that he passed the woman as she was walking along the South Lebanon road in the direction of Raisdell's corner.

The woman, Mr. Magoun said, kept her eyes on the ground and paid not the slightest attention to him when he passed her. He had his attention called to her by Mrs. McNally, who that morning had seen the stranger asleep on the piazza of the Legroe house on the same road.

Searchers Baffled So Far.

As fast as the clues have been brought to Mr. Eastman he has had them run down, and in the end has found himself no nearer the solution of the great problem, the whereabouts of Miss Mary Tucker, if alive, or the place where her body may be found if she has succumbed to her eleven days of wandering in the woods.

That she is somewhere in that great stretch of woods Mr. Eastman has not the slightest doubt.

With his volunteers he has reached every farmhouse within a radius of ten miles. At not one of these places has a woman stopped over night.

So widespread has been the news of her disappearance and her description in detail that it is believed beyond a doubt that had she appeared even far from the village centres that news would have at once reached Rochester.

But one other conclusion can be reached. It is that Miss Tucker must be in the woods, probably by this time dead from lack of food and exposure in the heavy rains of a week ago.

She is not known to have had any extra clothing save the shawl, which she discarded in Milton. A pair of low cut shoes identified as hers and a black underskirt were found near the Sanbornville station. Whether she carried with her clothing to replace these is not known to her relatives. They doubt if she did.

Must Be Without Food.

Neither have the searchers been able to find out that she obtained food in more than one place in her travels. If still alive she has been enabled to live only by the berries she has picked in the woods.

It was 9 o'clock to-day when Mr. Eastman gathered together his Saturday's search party.

Officer Thomas Gopis led his party, Isaac Wiley, Dan Goodwin, William Chesholm, Samuel Furbish, Henry Furbish, B. Moody, E. J. Crotty, [illegible], I. F. Emerson, Joseph Hayes, George Harris, P. Corrigan, C. B. Twombly, H. Hamilton, Bert Goodwin, H. Bagley, Eugene McConnell, Len Blaisdell, Morris Jones, Thomas Hickey, William Bagley, L. Shorey, James Hickey, Eugene Freebris, Benjamin Sleeper and Irving L. [illegible].

Another party started from West Lebanon, where County Solicitor Mathews had taken an interest in the case.

The East Rochester searchers made their way across the bridge to the road running toward South Lebanon, following the line of the railroad until they came to the crossing near which Miss Tucker was seen to leave the road and take to the railroad track.

Searchers in Squads.

Here the searchers also left the road. They divided into squads of three and penetrated the woods for three miles, keeping in sight of one another and going over every foot of the ground.

Few wilder stretches of territory can be imagined than this that was gone over. Thick underbrush at times halted the men and caused them to make detours. Here and there what had once been wagon roads to the lumber camps were found, but these yielded nothing to show that the missing woman had gone that way.

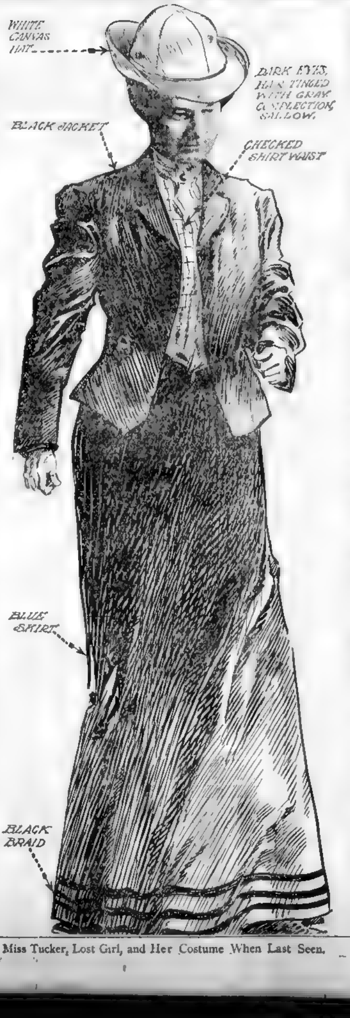
Until the noon hour the men were out and again in the afternoon. The same story was told by each as he presented himself to Director Eastman.

Sunday is now the day on which the hopes of those who went to find Miss Tucker are centred. By means of the posters which have been scattered broadcast, an appeal has been made for everyone to join in and help.

If they, too, report to-morrow night that they have been unable to find Miss Tucker, hope will be practically abandoned. There seems to be nothing more that can be done except to wait until Miss Tucker turns up alive in some unthought of locality or her body is discovered by accident.

Should Miss Tucker be found alive East Rochester, Rochester and South Lebanon will rejoice. They will ring the church bells to announce the fact in every town. Someone will secure the reward of $100 which has been offered for her finding, dead or alive, and will tell how he did it.

At the residence of Mr. George P. Faunce in Lynn, Mass., Rev. and Mrs. David W. Faunce are anxiously awaiting some tidings that will either bring joy or sorrow. By communication with Mr. Eastman they have been given the best news there is, but that has sent little comfort.



Miss Tucker, Lost Girl, and Her Costume When Last Seen.

CONNECTS CARLTON WITH CUDAHY KIDNAPPING.

Letter Received In New York Charges Another Crime Up to "Bluebeard" of Brooklyn, Man of Many Crimes Silent

By Boston American Leased Wire.

[illegible] that Carlton was connected with the famous Cudahy kidnapping case in Omaha [illegible] said Inspector Cross. "I have [illegible] investigation into this new charge against this man of many crimes [illegible] Carlton [illegible] course."

[illegible] Inspector Cross [illegible] a letter [illegible]

[illegible] in part as follows:

[illegible]

Carlton was a first class nurse in the [illegible] in Washington in March [illegible] During his stay there he spent a great deal of time in the laboratory of the hospital, experimenting with drugs and poisons.

"While there he robbed a patient in his care of $8. The case could not be proved [illegible] and was dropped.

"At about this time Eddie Cudahy was kidnapped. Carlton was mixed up in the affair.

"He had in his possession a piece of the child's clothing which he said he got from gypsy women in a photograph gallery in Washington.

"Carlton wrote to Mr. Cudahy, demanding $500 and saying he had a piece of the child's dress and could produce [illegible]."

[illegible] the Raymond Street Jail this morning [illegible] his shoulders and said with a sneer:

"I am closed up now. I am not going to talk any more about my case."

NAVAL MILITIA ON CRUISER COLUMBIA

New Haven, Ct., Aug. 5.—The three divisions of the Connecticut Naval Battalions from Bridgeport, Hartford and this city departed to-day for a ten day's cruise on the United States cruiser Columbia.

The crew of the Columbia has been placed ashore, or at least enough of them to give the Connecticut tars a chance to get some real service on board the cruiser. The vessel will spend much of the time in Gardners Bay, where some practice with the big guns will be had.

FIRE HEROINE IN TENEMENT HOUSE

Philadelphia, Aug. 5.—Mrs. Rebecca Brownstein, a young woman, lost her life while endeavoring to save the occupants of the tenement house, No. 315 Monroe street, during a fire early to-day. While hastening through a hallway to aid others she was overcome by smoke and died before the firemen arrived. The other occupants were rescued.

GIRL JILTED SEEKS DEATH IN HELL GATE FLOOD.

Pretty Artist of 19 Grieves a Year Over Engagement. Rescued After Heroic Work and Sent to Hospital Ward

New York, Aug. 5.—Annie Heirsch, a pretty little artist of nineteen, [illegible] party [illegible] into Hell Gate early to-day to end her life, after grieving [illegible] year [illegible] the day [illegible] the man she had expected to marry her had proved false.

Miss Heirsch graduated from the normal [illegible] two years ago [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] up her work [illegible] the girl [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] the foot of East One Hundred and Tenth street [illegible]

[illegible] after her. When she rose to the surface he seized her and made for the shore. He was caught by the outgoing tide and carried far from shore. The girl got [illegible]

[illegible] of a row boat fastened to the end of the pier. Too weak to raise the girl out of the water, he placed the unconscious body on the side of the boat and then aid came.

At Harlem hospital the little artist was placed in the prison ward, charged with attempting suicide.

NATIVES OF EAST AFRICA IN REVOLT

Berlin, Aug. 5.—The Governor of German East Africa telegraphed to-day to the Foreign Office that the natives in the Matumbi Mountains, north of Kilwa, have risen, also that there has been an [illegible] on the coast at Samanga, during which several warehouses were burned [illegible]

[illegible] East Africa hitherto has been quiet.

DISMISSES CASE OF CAMBRIDGE WOMAN

Portland, Me., Aug. 5.—Judge Putnam of the United States [illegible] court to-day dismissed without costs the bill in equity brought by the York County Savings Bank of Biddeford [illegible] of Cambridge, Mass., to [illegible] at an appraisal her land on which a Portland business block stands [illegible] at an appraisal the building. Judge Putnam decrees that the Circuit Court is without jurisdiction, as she is a resident of another State. He suggests that the matter be taken to the Supreme Court of Maine.

PRAY FOR RAIN TO SAVE GRAIN CROP

Bucharest, Roumania, Aug. 5.—The entire grain crop of Roumania is threatened with ruin owing to the persistent drought. There has been no rain for two months. The Holy Synod has ordered special prayers for rain, and processions carrying ikons will take place throughout the country to-morrow.

GRATEFUL TO GIVERS OF SKIN GRAFTED ON HER HAND.

Friends of Jennie Dooley, Injured in Laundry, Contributed 360 Pieces of Cuticle to Cover Burned Surface

Marblehead, Aug. 5.—"I can never thank enough those who gave up pieces of their own skin and suffered the pain in order that my hand might be saved to me," said Miss Jennie M. Dooley to-day, in speaking of the skin grafting performed on her hand and of the generosity of friends who contributed bits of skin for the operation.

"When my hand was caught in the mangle roller in my brother's laundry and the flesh was crushed and skin scraped off, my friends learned that the doctor needed some people to give up pieces of skin to graft over the burn.

"The first who offered, because they [illegible] sisters, Mary [illegible] Bonne [illegible] street, Mar[illegible] and Hannah, [illegible] Haley, Mrs. [illegible] and Edward Haley were [illegible]

"I am more obliged than I can tell to all [illegible] kind of them, let [illegible] bits of their skin off to be grown on me.

"I have suffered a good deal myself from the burn. My hand is not well yet, but it is doing as well as can be expected [illegible] wrist to my finger [illegible] from my friends [illegible] grafted on 360 [illegible] as he calls it."

Miss Dooley lives at No. 6 Reed street and the laundry where she was injured is the Excelsior Laundry, Union street, Salem. Her brother, John A. Dooley, runs the laundry.

"We were all very busy Saturday," said Miss Dooley, "hurrying out the week's work for Sunday. My brother had removed the mangle roller guard, which was not working right. I forgot the guard was off, and in the rush of work ran my hand between the rollers. My screams frightened the other girls.

[illegible] could get started [illegible] shut off the power [illegible] and got my hand out. My hand was dressed temporarily at Salem Hospital, but when I got home Dr. Hall said that grafting was all that could save it."

HIGGINS'S SUIT IS AGAIN DELAYED

Providence, R. I., Aug. 5.—The suit brought by Mayor James H. Higgins, of Pawtucket, against the tax assessors of that city was again certified to the Supreme Court by Judge George T. Brown in the Superior Court to-day on a motion to amend, made by counsel for the Assessors. It was desired to correct a clerical error. Counsel for the Mayor contended that as the case had been certified, it was beyond Judge Brown's jurisdiction, but it developed that the papers had not left the custody of the superior court.

[illegible] the mandatory provision law, [illegible] superior court must "forthwith certify any constitutional question to the Supreme Court," Judge Brown said today that, from a cursory examination of the law, he was convinced that in any case not criminal an attorney might, at the eleventh hour, raise a constitutional question, abruptly stop a trial and force the case up to the Supreme Court.

Lawyers generally condemn the provision, which was adopted at the last session of the Legislature through an oversight.

RE-SUBMISSION WAVE SWEEPS MAINE.

"Give People Chance to Vote on Liquor Question" the City of All Cities as Result of the Sturgis Commission Acts

PROHIBITION REGIME SEEMS ENDANGERED

There is a strong movement in Maine to have the law prohibiting the sale of liquor resubmitted to the people. Prohibition has been on trial in that State for half a century and for many years has been in the Constitution of the Commonwealth.

It is claimed that it has failed entirely of its purpose and that while the Sturgis Commission has enforced it in some cities, saloons in others are "wide open."

It is suggested that Governor Cobb call a special session of the Legislature and give the people a chance to decide by majority vote whether Maine shall have high license and local option, or stand by the Neal Dow law.

Men opposed to prohibition claim that the law has flooded the State with maddening pots u sold in dives, speak-easies and by pocket peddlers as whiskey. They assert that the repeal of the Prohibition law will be to the interest of public health as well as morality.

PROHIBITION THE GREAT ISSUE FOR FIFTY YEARS

Maine was the pioneer State in passing a law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, and "prohibition" has been the leading political issue there for fifty years. It was first put on the statute books through the efforts of [illegible] Neal Dow and the whole country watched the experiment. Several State tried it, too, but everywhere, for half a century, it has been regarded as peculiarly an institution of the Pine Tree State, and its effectiveness and [illegible] have been [illegible] in numberless campaigns.

There has never been a day when Maine was entirely "dry." At times the law has been vigorously enforced in some sections and openly violated in others. Local sentiment [illegible] the official in whose hands rested the execution of the law, determined whether [illegible] should not be [illegible] constituted [illegible].

Change of Sentiment.

After General Neal Dow died there appeared to be a change of sentiment in Maine regarding prohibition. He was an extraordinary man. He was of a pugnacious temperament on public questions and would fight to the last ditch. He was a marvelous organizer and an astute politician. He had a great personal following. He was so generally liked and respected for his personal merits that his advocacy alone determined the attitude of thousands of citizens. He believed the suppression of the sale of liquor was the most important [illegible] State or nation. With Neal Dow alive, no public man in Maine could see any likelihood of wiping prohibition off the law books.

Normally the State of Maine is strongly Republican, but occasionally it has elected a Democrat as Governor. But whatever the general political situation might be [illegible] party could see any advantage to be gained by fighting the law which at times was being violated from K[illegible] period of Neal [illegible] produced such great politicians as James G. Blaine and Thomas B. Reed but it is doubtful if either, had he wished, could have beaten Dow in Maine on a question involving the abolition of prohibition.

The Sturgis Commission.

It has always been a question in Maine whether a majority of voters there were in favor of the [illegible] was so powerful and [illegible] question [illegible] of its great apostle [illegible] seems to have waned in [illegible] the Sturgis [illegible] to enforce it the more impressed outsiders as a campaign against the illegal and time honored local option.

The Sturgis commissioners have been so active in the work of doing what local officers either could not accomplish or would not attempt that the State is in an uproar, and prohibition has become more lively as a public question than for many, many years.

Of recent months the muttering, which in Dow's time was never permitted to grow above a whisper, that prohibition ought to be resubmitted to the people at the polls has swelled into a chorus so strong that there is talk that Governor Cobb may call a special session of the Legislature to decide whether the voters shall have a chance to tell the world what they think of prohibition after a trial of it in the State for fifty years.

The BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN has tried to learn through its correspondents in all sections of the State what Maine people think of the resubmission question. The sentiment of the leaders and followers in both parties has been sought and is given in a half score of towns or cities. So far as can be judged from statements by party leaders and [illegible], public sentiment is strongly in favor of resubmission.

Even the friends of prohibition feel, in many instances, that the law should either be repealed or enforced to the letter.

The activity of the Sturgis Commission in suppressing liquor selling in communities where the sentiment in favor of a "wet" town is strong, appears to be forcing the situation to a crisis.

30 MORE CASES OF YELLOW FEVER.

Archbishop Chappelle, Noted Catholic Prelate, Dying of Scourge, Contracted in His Work in Infected District

FOUR ARRESTS MADE OF ALLEGED GRAFTERS

New Orleans, La., Aug. 5.—The Board of Health issued a bulletin to-night showing that there were thirty new cases and eight deaths from yellow fever during the past 24 hours. This brings the total number of cases up to 505 and ninety-seven deaths. The newly infected districts are placed at fifteen. Of the eight deaths, five occurred in the Emergency Hospital and three in the Italian quarter. All were Italians except two.

One of to-day's cases was found in the Tenderloin district and another in the outskirts of the same neighborhood. The trend of the fever continues toward the lower end of the city.

Archbishop Dying.

Archbishop P. L. Chappelle, of the diocese of Louisiana, and apostolic delegate to Cuba and Porto Rico, is confined to his bed at the Archbishopric in this city with a virulent type of yellow fever. He has been sick for the past few days, and to-night it was reported he was dying. His residence is located on Esplanade avenue, in the heart of the most exclusive French residence section, which has been considered safe from the disease, as it had been restricted principally to the Italian quarter.

Archbishop Chappelle has spent considerable time in the infected district, and has been of inestimable service in advising the Italians, who are all Catholics, to heed the instructions of the authorities. He is a fluent linguist, and could mingle with them. He was stricken yesterday, but the diagnosis of the case was not confirmed until to-day.

Graft Arrest Made.

New Orleans, Aug. 5.—Bowed with grief and panic stricken with terror at the continual spread of the dread Yellow Death, this city was aroused to intense indignation to-day by charges against four men who are now under arrest. Graft, it is charged, extended even into the city of death, and kerosene oil given to use in the fight on the yellow fever was converted to their own uses.

There were four men arrested, these being Joseph L. Houston, James Nelson, Charles K. Leinoble and Thomas Leonard. They had been engaged with scores of other men, to an [illegible] premises, to screen cisterns to keep out the deadly mosquito and to pour oil on the water. Hundreds of gallons of oil were supplied to them. Now, it is alleged, they sold this oil.

Work Under Federal Control.

After it had become known that an appeal had been sent to the President to take charge of the situation, Dr. J. H. White, of the marine service, was asked what change would result from his assumption of control. The doctor said:

"We want the citizens, one and all, to make a concerted and simultaneous effort to kill all the mosquitoes in the city."

Dread Mosquito.

"There is one way, and only one way, in which yellow fever is transmitted, namely by the bite of a mosquito of the variety known as the stegomyia fasciata. So sure am I of this that I would be willing that my wife and children should sleep in apartments [illegible] from a virulent case of yellow fever solely by an eighteen mesh wire screen, though the air from the infected compartment might pass freely to theirs. I know—not think—that this is the only method in which the disease is transmitted."

The United States Government has formally assumed charge of the situation. Surgeon J. H. Young of the New Orleans district will be in control under the direct command of Surgeon General Wyman at Washington.

Even Restitution Cannot Stop Relentless Pursuit by Big Bonding Companies, Says Pinkerton Superintendent

CASES OF MILES AND ALLEN PROVE TRUTH

That time and distance do not check pursuit of embezzlers and absconders seems to be demonstrated by the locating of two men, long wanted in this city. One is Frank C. Miles, charged with theft of $150,000 nine years ago, now found at Cape Town, South Africa; the other is Willard S. Allen, who is wanted for embezzlement of $100,000 from the Methodist Preachers' Aid Society, now known to be in Buenos Ayres, South America. Arrest and extradition to this country is confidently expected in each case.

Two other men whom the Nemesis of the law is seeking now are Frank E. Victon, missing cashier of the Oxford National Bank, who disappeared in February, short $8,500 in his accounts, and Charles F. Berry, trustee for estates valued at $300,000, and short $300,000. Berry disappeared early in March.

Escape Hardly Possible.

Superintendent Leith of the Boston Pinkerton Agency yesterday told a reporter for the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN something of the relentless system which pursues these men, and which finally led to the locating of Miles and Allen. He said:

"We frequently do the searching for the large securities companies. Most of them are located in Baltimore, with agents in all large cities, including Boston. Some of them have their own detective bureaus.

"Once a man is bonded in those companies he is never released until his obligation is regularly discharged. If he steals and runs away there is no compromise. If his f[illegible] settle it makes no difference. He will be sought until he dies. It is a hounding system that is considered necessary to the general scheme.

"No one can be bought off for wrong doing; he must pay the penalty or remain banished from society to the end of his life, hidden and ever alert lest he be discovered, for once located he can scarcely escape.

How Search Is Made.

"When a defaulter skips the matter is either taken up by the surety company's agency or turned over to us. The procedure is the same in either event. We notify our twenty offices from Maine to Oregon, give an accurate description of the man and send his photographs if possible. We also send an accounting of all of the facts leading to the crime. The amount of money is given and whether taken in lump sum or through peculation. Correspondents in all countries and lands are notified.

"Soon we get into touch with all police departments, wherever located. If nothing tangible shows, we next flood the cities of the world with circulars setting forth all the needed information.

"As I said, it is a case of hanging to the man for all time. It is as easy to get a man in India or Australia as in England. So with other possessions about the world. Small independent countries are the most trying as to international law."

Speaking of the case of Willard Allen, Superintendent Leith said:

"I realize that it is extremely difficult to secure a criminal's return from South America. Across the water it is generally different, because treaties exist with the countries holding most of the possessions, while South America and Mexico are stumbling blocks to such procedures."

BIG CROWD GREETS GRAND OPERA HOUSE HIT.

Enthusiasm at Reopening of Popular Playhouse for "The Millionaire Detective" and Howard Hall in Chief Role

The popularity of the Grand Opera House as a place of amusement and of Howard Hall as an actor were demonstrated last night at the reopening of the house for the season of 1905-06. When the curtain rose on the first act of "The Millionaire Detective" the playhouse was literally jammed with people.

When Mr. Hall [illegible] at [illegible] in the [illegible] part of the [illegible] he was [illegible] to repeat so [illegible].

"The Millionaire Detective" is a four act comedy drama written by Mr. Hall and Harry Clay Blaney and is based on [illegible] in connection with the celebrated Cassie Chadwick case. It is built along conventional melodramatic lines, sensation following sensation in rapid succession. The audience was kept at fever pitch during the exciting four acts.

Mr. Hall plays three characters in the play and in each he shows that versatility which made him so well liked in his earlier successes at this house.

As the Millionaire Detective he is at his best and he displayed [illegible] character in a painstaking manner. The climax of the second act was well conceived and admirably acted and so persistent was the audience in its clamorous demands that Mr. Hall was obliged [illegible] before the curtain and speak a few words of thanks.

Mr. Hall's supporting company is excellent. "The Millionaire Detective" will be the attraction all this week and will be followed by "Dangers of a Working Girl."

SCOTTY BUYS $100 RED TIE AND $1000 BEER.

Albuquerque, N. M., Aug. 5.—Walter Scott, the Death Valley miner and cowboy, played a brief but lively engagement here. Jumping from a Pullman off [illegible] clothing store, threw a $100 bill on the counter and called for a red necktie. Seizing the tie and not waiting for the [illegible] a gambling hall and lost $3,000 in the crap game in less than five minutes.

This caused a thirst, and "Scotty" laid [illegible] a shower of silver dollars, [illegible] out by handfuls as his train pulled out.

BELIEVE SEVEN ARE DROWNED

Wichita, Kan., Aug. 5.—Mrs. Lewis Steinbuchel and her three children, and three children of the Rev. D. F. Lynch, are all believed to have been drowned near this city yesterday. The party went out boating, and early this morning had not been found.

Mr. Lynch is pastor of the First Methodist Church.

WILL BURY PARROT IN GRAVE WITH HIS MASTER.

Last Request of "Uncle Dick" Richards Was That His 45-Year-Old Pet Should Be Chloroformed When He Died

When "Uncle Dick" Richards, the Brookline hermit, who died Thursday, is buried this afternoon, his pet parrot, "Tommy," which is forty five years old, will be chloroformed and buried in the same grave. This is at "Uncle Dick's" request.

"Uncle Dick's" right name was John Slater Richards. He was ninety four years old and was a florist. He lived alone with "Tommy," the parrot, in the little white cottage near the Clyde street entrance to the Country Club. The parrot usually perched on his master's shoulder and there was a wonderfully close sympathy between the aged man and the aged bird.

A few years ago "Uncle Dick" set aside $1,000 in his will, to be given to a relative as pay for caring for "Tommy" when "Uncle Dick" should die. But this relative died before "Uncle Dick" did. So the hermit changed his will, inserting a stipulation that the parrot should be mercifully killed after his master's death and buried in his master's grave.

So tomorrow "Tommy," who has grown nearly unmanageable since his master's death, will be scientifically chloroformed by Dr. William F. DeFries, who attended the hermit in his last illness. Then the bird will be laid in the grave which is being prepared in Walnut Hill Cemetery.

UNCONSCIOUS THREE WEEKS, MISS CRAM MAY RECOVER.

Lenox, Aug. 5.—Miss Ethel M. Cram of New York, who has been unconscious three weeks after being kicked in the head by a runaway pony, is making a fight for life that astonishes surgeons. Her fractured skull was trepanned by Dr. Henry Colt, chief of the hospital staff of the House of Mercy in Pittsfield. But it was admitted that she had little chance for life.

She lay unconscious, giving no sign of intelligence. From hour to hour her death was expected. Now, to the amazement of her physicians and nurses, Miss Cram has shown signs of improvement and may survive.

Miss Cram is the daughter of Mrs. Henry A. Cram. They have lived at "Highwood," their Lenox cottage, for many summers. Miss Cram was driving in a pony cart on July 13 with her two little nieces. One of the reins dropped, Miss Cram leaned over to pick it up, was pitched under the pony's heels and kicked till she lay bleeding and unconscious.

Two large pieces of bone were taken from the left side of her head. It was found that particles of bone had lacerated the brain. Silver plates were inserted and drains established.

Last Thursday, after many days of unconsciousness, Miss Cram revived enough to reach out her hand toward her sister and to make a motion of rejection when food was offered her.

PROMINENT WOMAN "FENCE" FOR GIRL THIEVES?

Has South Boston a woman "Fagin" who spurs on young girls to steal articles from department stores by offering money for their plunder?

Is a prominent South Boston woman, said to be a prominent church member, acting as a "fence" for these children?

These two questions have been debated at length by residents of City Point since the case of four young girls, the oldest fifteen, charged with shoplifting, was disposed of yesterday by Judge Fallon. It [illegible] among the young people [illegible] that certain young girls have boasted that they had stolen goods from department stores in order to receive rewards from the woman in question.

It is said the South Boston police have been investigating these stories and are watching [illegible] house.

The girls [illegible] court yesterday charged with shoplifting are Lillian Cullen, aged fifteen, of No. 190 Second street, who until [illegible] lived with her married sister at No. [illegible] avenue, City Point; Mary [illegible] aged fifteen, of No. 629 East Sixth street; Catherine [illegible], aged twelve, of No. 598 East Sixth street, and Elizabeth Glover, aged twelve, of No. 6 Hart place.

All pleaded guilty and were placed on probation to Nov. 4. Patrolman John Flynn said that the girls had stolen over $[illegible] worth of goods from department stores.

SURVIVES WIFE AND DAUGHTERS BUT ONE YEAR.

Woonsocket, R. I., Aug. 5.—Francis L. O'Reilly died here to-day on the anniversary of the tragic deaths of his wife, his two daughters and his step-daughter, at Digby, N. S.

Mr. O'Reilly was taken ill soon after the drowning accident by which he lost all but one member of his family, a son. Bright's disease was given as his ailment, but his friends believed that he grieved himself to his grave.

He was sixty one years of age and one of the leading lawyers of the city. He was the first Irish-American lawyer in Rhode Island. Among Mr. O'Reilly's business properties is the Woonsocket Opera House and two daily papers.

WASHINGTON SMART SET INCLUDED IN GRAVE CHARGES.

Special to the Sunday American.

Wooster, O., Aug. 5.—Sensation was heaped on sensation in the Taggart divorce case to-day. For the first time since the proceedings began the charges of immorality went outside the army circles and were directed [illegible] members of Washington society. A United States Senator, whose name was withheld from the deposition in which he was attacked by a witness, was said to have been too friendly with the wife of Major Taggart in Washington. [illegible] startling testimony was given [illegible] the day ended with the unexpected arrival of Perry Rope, of this city, who during the day had been one of Major Taggart's witnesses against his wife.

Mrs. Taggart interrupted Rope's testimony in court by crying: "That's a lie. There is not a word of truth in it."

She made this charge while Rope was testifying to having seen her give [illegible] to her two small [illegible]. As soon as court adjourned she went to Major Van Ness and secured a warrant charging Rope with perjury.

He was arrested.

Mrs. Taggart promised to-night to prove her charges against him next week, when she will take the stand in her own defence.

Senator Mentioned.

Much evidence of an incriminatory nature was given against Mrs. Taggart today. She left the court room during the progression of that part of it in which a United States Senator was mentioned.

Major Taggart's [illegible] trial over [illegible] are on the [illegible] watches every point [illegible] points upon which he desires [illegible] to dwell. He advises [illegible] pressed the point far enough [illegible] the evident strength and [illegible] of testimony drawn from [illegible] witnesses.

He takes notes of importance as new affairs develope in a fast [illegible] whole panorama of the case as well as those professionally in charge.

"There will [illegible] the first of the week," said Howard Taggart, brother of the Major, this evening. The Major, who was standing near, nodded his head [illegible] of what his brother [illegible] it was said somet[illegible] may be expected.

Major Taggart left [illegible] for Orrville, where he expects to spend Sunday with his aged parents. Mrs. Taggart is bearing up bravely under the trying ordeal.

The witnesses for the plaintiff will hardly be finished before Wednesday next. Mrs. Taggart, during a conversation, said she supposed it would take two or three days before she would be excused from the stand.

Major Taggart, before leaving the city, asked the AMERICAN correspondent to say that there was [illegible] in the published report that [illegible] not go on the stand against Mrs. Taggart. Mrs. Taggart said that she expected [illegible] her Sunday as usual, attending services, if she felt well, if not, remaining quietly at home with her boys.

FEW CONSUMPTION DEATHS THIS WEEK

With but thirty-six deaths from consumption during the past week Boston had the lowest death rate from this disease since 1886, according to the weekly Board of Health report.

The total number of deaths in Boston for the week was 234, a decrease of sixteen over last year's figures for the same week. Twenty deaths were caused from heart disease and twelve were from violent causes.

CLEVELANDS PASS THROUGH BOSTON

Grover Cleveland and Mrs. Cleveland were in Boston yesterday for thirty-five minutes, en route to Long Island, where they will attend the funeral of Mrs. John G. Carlisle, wife of the former Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland arrived at the North station from West Ossipee, N. H., at 12:25 o'clock, and were driven to the South station, where they took the 1 o'clock train for New York.

BOWEN HAS A CALLER.

Alderman Patrick Bowen was about the happiest man in Boston last night when the doctor told him that it was a twelve-pound boy. Both Mrs. Bowen and the little stranger are said to be doing finely.

VIOLIN SECRET LEFT BY DEAD MASTER TO WORKMAN.

Northampton, Aug. 5.—Andrew H. Hyde, the rediscoverer of the Cremona process of violin manufacture, dropped dead to-night in his home in this city, aged sixty four years. He was born in Lee and when a young man went to different Connecticut cities and learned wood-working. Later he worked under Thomas A. Edison. Twenty-three years ago he began manufacturing violins and made 1,800.

He experimented for years trying to rediscover the lost secret of the rich tones of the Italian Cremona instruments and nine years ago succeeded.

Since that time his instruments have become famous and sold for from $500 to $1,000 each.

He communicated his secret to Oscar L. Clark, a workman who has been in his employ for seventeen years.

Situated among the beautiful wooded hills and broad pastures of the hamlet of Chiltonville lies the grand estate of Eben D. Jordan, the horse show king of a country of horsemen.

The word beautiful does not half describe the worth of the place—it is magnificent. It is a luxurious Summer home for a man with common sense ideas. And a man with common sense ideas has spent the most of the hot Summer months there, dividing his time between his horses, fishing in a most beautiful sheet of water and hunting in acres of woodland which contains trees of all specimens. This year, however, Mr. Jordan is spending his time abroad.

SPLENDID RING RECORD MADE BY FORGE FARM HORSES

The Plymouth Hackney stud was founded with two aims, namely, to produce the best kind of harness and horse. Beauty, manners and speed were the characteristics sought.

Mr. Jordan knew how hard it was to obtain a pair of hands no horses perfectly matched in disposition and manners. He chose the English Hackney as the ideal. Both the hackney and the American trotter have a great deal in common in their purity ancestry, so on that they could be crossed to a decided advantage in many localities.

It may be necessary at an early date to employ hackney stallion to breed out the pacing freaks in our trotting families.

How successful Mr. Jordan has been is attested by his triumphs in the show rings in the country and by the inspection of the clean, handsome young horses which he has bred.

At the head of the Forge Farm stud is Gentlemen John, a very rich-coated dark brown horse, approaching a black, which is a true hackney color. He stands fifteen hands two inches in height and is very powerfully formed, with a fine finish, which with his pure gait, lofty action and lady deportment impresses one as to his great purity and value. He has been a noted winner of prizes both in England and America, having been awarded the first premium at the English Hackney Society's London Show.

McKinley, imported in 1903, is a large horse, standing fifteen hands three inches high, and is a very powerfully built horse, with a great degree of nerve force and a resolute style of action. In color he is dark chestnut. He was foaled in 1899 and was exhibited in English hackney horse and agricultural society shows for four years, where he became noted as a winner of first prizes.

Dillon Prime Minister is a hackney pony, thirteen hands three inches tall, with a white star and three white fetlocks. He was imported in 1898 and exhibited that year, winning first place at Philadelphia and Brockton and third at New York National Exhibitions. He has been exhibited every year since then.

Prize-Winning Ponies.

The show team of Forge Farm have been at various shows during the present season, and with them are four ponies owned by Lolon Prince Minister, Tangerine, who has won first blue ribbons in this year's shows, Domino, who has won five; Lady Eckles, four, and Sunny Jim, four.

Among the early importations by the Plymouth hackney stud was the stallion Lord Derby, a horse of extra fine formation and impressive carriage. He is a full of quarters, clean and strong limbed, clean legs, a trifle long in pastern, and a good road wagon. Lord Derby was sent back to England. Could he have been sent to Vermont and mated with Lammes and other Morgan mares, the result would have been most beneficial to the horse breeding interest.

Mr. Jordan's latest importation was a band of seven teen mares, all by gentlemen, and Mr. Jordan has been establishing horses since 1897 and in a room of his private stables are the trophies and ribbons which his horses have accumulated in these years.

In the shows of the present year twelve horses have been exhibited. The President and The Baron, a superb pair of chestnut geldings, hackneys and imported. They have won three blue and one red ribbon and have been pronounced to be about the best pair in their class in the country. They have recently been sold, and the price, $2,000, seems to be the very best evidence for the judgment.

Dillon Hilliard and Plymouth Champion are a pair who can lead in most any class of roadsters, as a pair or tandem. They are chestnuts in color, with white markings, and stand fifteen hands two inches. Hildred is a mare of the finest type and highest class. Her manners are almost unapproachable for perfectness, while her realistic action shows that she possesses stamina and restrained nerve force. This year she has won four blue ribbons and two championship trophies. Plymouth Champion has won four blue ribbons.

Lord Belfast and Lord Burleigh are bay geldings, standing fifteen two hands, imported, bred in the best strains of the breed and are as near perfect specimens of the type as exist. Their high character is shown partially by the fact that they have won eight first prizes.

Another pair which captivate show people are the chestnut mares Kitty Grey and Narina. They stand fifteen two hands and are used to all harness. These were imported and bred in the best lines. As winners they are equal with Lord Belfast and Lord Burleigh. The [illegible] pair [illegible] Tangerine, a bay mare [illegible] over fourteen one hundred [illegible] pace [illegible] Domino, a bay gelding [illegible] a trifle pitty.

The stables and buildings at Forge Farm are plain from an architectural point of view, and suited to the needs of a great breeding establishment. There are [illegible] horses in the breeding department [illegible] of the farm working horses.

Leaf [illegible] are [illegible] from weanlings to those coming three years and were sent to the farm of Senator Fairfax, Lynchburg, Va. All were foaled at Forge Farm and are pure hackneys.

BIG LIST OF ENTRIES FOR LYNN DOG SHOW

The entries for the Point of Pines dog show, August 18 and 19, are coming in very satisfactorily. In fact, they are coming in much better than the average as in a well known fact that most dog people keep their entries back until the last moment. There is no doubt but what we shall have a two-point show, possibly a four.

Visitors to the Pines will be well repaid, as it is a much improved place under the present management, and in receiving a very large patronage from the best class of visitors to Revere. The electrical illuminations is well worth all the time and expense of visiting this most beautiful resort on the North Shore. Be in the swim. Enter your dogs freely and be assured of one of the most pleasant times of your life.

CYCLING SPEEDY BIKERS MEET AT REVERE TRACK YACHTING MANY REGATTAS HELD BY LOCAL CLUBS MOTOR CYCLING GREAT MEET AT WALTHAM THIS WEEK BOXING

ARSENAL IS HOME FIRST IN BAY STATE STAKES AT NARRAGANSETT TRACK

Special to the Sunday American.

Narragansett Park Race Track, Aug. 5.—In a blaze of success the Summer running meeting of the Narragansett Breeders' Association came to a close to-day after three weeks of brilliant racing with some of the greatest thoroughbreds in the country performing. That the promoters have achieved their original object and placed flat racing on a firm basis is generally conceded and another year will see greater masses than ever attending the track, which furnishes the most exciting sport on the calendar.

The last day was a fitting climax to the series of stellar cards that have drawn the lovers of the thoroughbreds to the park and the occasion was made memorable for some of the biggest surprises that have happened during the meeting.

It was estimated that the largest crowd of meeting were present on the final occasion and the grandstand and green were black with people who were being continually thrown into a fever of excitement at the sensational finishes and terrific struggles of the gallant steeds.

Rattling Races.

Never was the strife so keen as on getaway day as the jockeys want to make a last stand to land their mounts in front and receive the homage of the multitude.

It turned out to be a gala day for Jockey Romanelli, the little Italian, who handled his horses like a wizard and succeeded in walking away not only with the blue ribbon prize, the Bay State stake, but he also captured two other races, and let the others go after what he left them. He outshone Mickey Crimmins, who had been having things all his own way, and was praised on all sides for his grand work.

Aside from the winnings by some wide shots the new record made by Neptunus in the last race when he beat the mark made by Ibsechus of 1.42 3-5 for a mile and forty yards and established new figures of 1.42 2-5 was a feature.

The win by Neptunus was one of the disappointments of the day, as Yorkshire Lad was swung on heavily and some of the books refused him. He sold as an odds-on favorite at 8 to 5 and he had difficulty in getting placed. He was not ridden at his best, as he had plenty left for the last rush.

Bookies Were Lucky.

The bookies got back on the players in a measure by the result of the finishes and there were some big tumbles for the talent. They started in the first race.

This was a mile and forty yards jaunt for three-year-olds and up under selling conditions, but there were four that refused the issue and the missing quartet was composed of Samuel H. Harris, Catalina, St. Gallen and Courier.

There were seven left to contest with Sincerity Bell, a heavily played favorite, backed down from 2½ to even money. Supreme Court was a good second on the boards at 2½, but receded to 3¼ at closing, and Sweet Tone went back from 3 to 5.

Stepaway, who had done nothing to warrant a play, was chalked up at 15, and with nothing doing went up to 20 and was last thing looked at.

The race was one of the biggest reverses the ring followers had met during the meet, as the three best candidates looked easy.

The field got away to a good start with Verness showing the way, and he struck the first turn in the lead, with Sincerity Belle ensconced in a safe position next to the rail. Stepaway saved ground and kept behind the leaders and did not appear till the bunch entered the stretch when the six-year-old mare by Galen d'Or, Walt a White, came through with a rush on the inside, passed Verness like a flash and began to draw away.

Helgeson, who was up, did not have to use the whip, but kept an eye on the war fare behind him and swept under the wire two lengths to the good. Sweet Tone made a swift flight in the last furlong and with Drone nipped the fast tiring Verness.

There was no running left in Supreme Court and he practically quit.

Later came the clash for the Bay State stake, with the best selections from the stables on the list.

Again Master of Craft failed to respond, as it was a selling event for three-year-olds and up. Yorkshire Lad, Stroller, Monacodor and Bouvier also refused to try it. Elliott, the five-year-old horse from the Day stable, was simply swamped with the money, with Palette giving him a rub in the ring.

Arsenal, the old warhorse and great Metropolitan handicap winner, was given the go by the public, as he was not considered fit in such fast company.

But the old warrior proved to be a thorn in the side of those who favored Elliott so much, and he pulled down the money in a galant chase and a hot finish.

For some unknown reason the play fell off slightly on Elliott and Palette at the bugle, but they carried the biggest piles.

It was Arsenal all the way from the lift of the barrier and all around the circuit he held away by a couple of lengths, and he kept the pace warm for the whole distance.

Goldfleur made a brave effort to stay up with the leader and held second position till the stretch was reached, when she weakened.

Battle for Second.

It was a battle royal going the straightaway with Arsenal, Elliott and Lord Badge fighting under whip and spur. The aged horse, Arsenal, had the power and got by the judges with half a length to spare while Elliott and Lord Badge had a sizzling duel, in which the former prevailed by a head.

To a poor start in the fifth race for two-year-olds for five furlongs in which Venus and Crossways were left at the barrier, Rust got the pole, but was quickly approached by Sunglow, the Hayman gelding, and even money favorite, who went the distance well in hand and won by three lengths over Rust, was played well for place and connected.

The closing race was another hard blow to the betting crowd, as Neptunus, John Haynes's four-year-old colt, a 4 to 1 shot, won from the prohibitive favorite, Yorkshire Lad, but had to break the record.

Vanderbilt Captains a Polo Team at Newport

Reginald C. Vanderbilt on His Favorite Pony, Reggy, Considered the Fastest Polo Mount in Country.

Newport, R. I., Aug. 5.—Reginald C. Vanderbilt will this season be captain of the Westchester Polo Club team, and under his leadership the cottagers who play the game will endeavor to wrest the championship here and at Narragansett Pier from the many visiting teams.

Mr. Vanderbilt has the largest as well as the finest string of ponies in this section of the country. They are all speedy, well trained and the cheapest of the lot cost Mr. Vanderbilt over $1,500.

One of them, a bay mare, Peggy, cost $2,000, and is the fastest and most tractable pony on the field this season. With this string of animals Mr. Vanderbilt is certainly superbly mounted.

Mr. Vanderbilt made his mark as a polo player recently, when, with the score a tie, he ran the ball the entire length of the field and made what proved to be the winning goal for his side. Previous to that incident he had been counted as an indifferent player, who was quite as likely to miss the ball as to hit it.

Mr. Vanderbilt is the life of the polo set here, and the young men who are engaged in the game here at present look upon him as their leader.

Reggie Vanderbilt has been practising polo all through the Winter at his farm in Portsmouth, where he has a polo field, and is now having completed a training ring. With his brother, Alfred Vanderbilt, who also has a polo field at his farm, they are playing together in practice and have, therefore, the advantage of other players, who must depend on practice during the regular season.

MOHAWK II. WINS THE RICH SPECIAL AT SARATOGA.

In a Furious Drive the Sandford Thoroughbred Beats Out Voorhees in a Great Race at the Spa Yesterday

Special to the Boston American.

Saratoga, Aug. 5.—John Sanford of Amsterdam, N. Y., won the famous Saratoga Special, one of America's premier sporting turf fixtures, here this afternoon with his chestnut colt Mohawk II., a son of Rockton and La Tosca.

Mohawk, ridden by Redfern, closed a well played second choice at 3 to 1.

Voorhees, at 10 to 1, with O'Neil in the saddle, ran second, while Tangle, by Meddler-Handspun, a full sister to Tanya, ruling at 10 to 1, was third.

Mohawk and Voorhees led the field from end to end. The pair hooked up at the head of the stretch eye to eye, and from there on fought out a desperate duel right to the winning post, Mohawk drawing away to win on the final jump.

Favorite Badly Beaten.

August Belmont's Oaklawn, the favorite, purchased two hours before the bugle called the young thoroughbreds to the post for $30,000, ran away back, finishing ninth in a field of ten starters.

The story of the Saratoga Special running is simply told. Voorhees showed in front first and stayed there to the far turn, where Redfern forced Mohawk's lead in front. Meanwhile Bill Phillips and Tangle were off badly. Oaklawn, in the middle of the field, commenced to gradually drop out of it.

At the turn for home Mohawk II., still leading Voorhees by a small margin, took the lash from Redfern. O'Neil followed suit. It was hammer and tongs from there on, Mohawk winning by a head, while Tangle closed into third place, just half a length away.

The Saratoga Special was worth $13,500 and $2,500 in plate.

THE RESULTS.

FIRST RACE—Selling; three-year-olds and upward, seven furlongs—Rubric, 105 (Hildebrand), 13 to 1 and 4 to 1, won; Goldsmith, 103 (J. J. Walsh), 7 to 1 and 5 to 2, second; Mad Mullah, 102 (W. Knapp), 11 to 2 and 8 to 5, third. Time—1.25 4-5. Dr. Spruill, Ironsides, Jocund, Scotch Plume, Alwar, Royal Window, Fillmore and Warwick also ran.

SECOND RACE—The North American Steeplechase, for four-year-olds and upward, about 2½ miles—Sandhurst, 142 (Ralstock), even and 1 to 4, won; Jimmy Lane, 150 (Owens), 10 to 1 and 2 to 5, second; Collamy (J. O'Brien), even and 1 to 4, third. Time—5.29.

THIRD RACE—The Saratoga Special, for two-year-olds, five and one-half furlongs—Mohawk II., 122 (Redfern), 4 to 1 and 8 to 5, won; Voorhees, 122 (O'Neil), 12 to 1 and 4 to 1, second; Tangle, 119 (Lyne), 10 to 1 and 4 to 1, third. Time—1.07. Accountant, Battleaxe, Dolly Albee, Bill Phillips, Ironsides, Oaklawn, McKittridge also ran.

FOURTH RACE—The Travers; for three-year-olds, one and one-fourth miles—Dandelion, 111 (Shaw), 5 to 2 and even, won; Merry Lark, 126 (Hildebrand), 4 to 1 and 8 to 5, second; Glen Echo, 126 (J. Martin), 8 to 1 and 3 to 1, third. Time—2.08. Van Tromp, Buttler and Woodsaw also ran.

FIFTH RACE—One mile and an eighth; for three-year-olds and up—Uncle Leigh, 11 (Higgins), 5 to 2 and 3 to 5, won; Greencrest, 103 (Baird), 11 to 5 and 3 to 2, second; Palmtree, 106 (W. Knapp), 6 to 5 and 1 to 4, third. Time, 1.53 3-5. Three starters.

SIXTH RACE—One mile; handicap, three-year-olds and up—Bandy, 107 (O'Neil), 5 to 5 and 3 to 5, won; M. Beaucaire, 117 (J. Martin), 20 to 1 and 8 to 1, second; Prince Hamburg, 107 (Hildebrand), 5 to 2 and 4 to 5, third. Time, 1.40. Gamara, Israelite, Wotan, St. Valentine, Emperor of India also ran.

THE FRIEND WON GREAT RACE AT READVILLE IN STRAIGHT HEATS

It was "ladies' day" at Readville yesterday, and all women folk were admitted free at the gate, with free seats in the grandstand.

"Ladies' day" at a Boston race course means a race with a field of white trotters and a race between gentlemen road drivers. Charley Jewett had arranged a race with four fast whites, but two of them had to be shipped early Saturday morning with their stables, which prevented the race. John Howell and Alta McDonald both called on Mr. Jewett and assured him that if he would give such a race at the Grand Circuit meeting that they would each bring a white or dappled gray trotter.

The grand stand was well filled and it made a pretty sight, or as Rashe Turner said, "Like the singing seats in a country 'meeting' house."

No Betting on Races.

There was no betting. It is doubtful if even a single dollar was wagered; the spectators seemed content to watch the race, and they saw the ideal kind.

The Friend in the 2.10 pace met a speedy foeman in the mare Lizzie H., but he never wavered. Drawing the pole he was not headed, but close at his quarter was the incessant patter of contending hoofs.

Rector went to his side in the first heat and stayed there until they swung into the stretch, when Lizzie H. came very fast on the outside and, passing Rector, drove the son of Heir-at-Law out in 2:08½. 2:08¼.

The Friend Had to Work.

Smith employed the same tactics in the second and third heats, but the little black horse was too stout hearted at any stage of the game. He won, and now is in the free-for-all class in this country's bull ring circuits.

The 2.18 class for trotters had a good field, and each driver wanted the lion's share of the purse. Eight horses started, and from wire to wire six horses were bunched in three lengths.

Jenny Scott had the pole, and she kept it.

Betty Brook was in sixth place up the back stretch, and on the upper turn had worked round the bunch and came into the stretch in third horse place, with Ranncatcher at his wheel. The latter came very fast, and at the distance post looked like the winner, but a break cost him the honor. Jenny Scott finished first, with Betty Brook a close second.

Jenny Scott Again.

The second and third heats were repetitions of the first, only in the third heat Betty Brook, having second money, then took it a little easy and let the field fight it out. They were bunched all the way. McDougall, in fifth place at the pole, worked along past the field, and he was able to finish in second place in 2.14¼.

Easy for Stiletto.

The 2.20 class for pacers had seven starters. Stiletto, the fast son of Steinway, was the favorite, and walked away with the race in three heats, getting a mark of 2.14½.

They were all after the money. Starlight, by Bourbon Patchen, in Bob Grady's stable, had a world of speed and went for the Maine horse two heats, then "kind o' gin out," as David Harum said about the big-gaited horse at the county fair and Nan Patterson, sick and comely, forged up and made third money good. General Starr, by Director General, was a busy horse and finished well up each heat. He plucked his entrance fee and his driver looked happy.

BEVERLYS BLANKED BY ST. JOHNS OF PEABODY.

Special to the Sunday American.

Beverly, Mass., Aug. 5.—Baseball fans from all over the State gathered at Peabody's Field this afternoon to witness the game between the St. John of Peabody aggregation and the Beverly team.

The game brought out a large number of college men, all yelling for young "Bernie" James, the schoolboy twirler of Salem, who pitched a sensational game for the St. John team, whitewashing the Beverly players by the score of 3 to 0.

Considerable interest was attached to this game, as there has been keen rivalry between these two pitchers for some time. Young James is to enter Holy Cross College this Fall, and by defeating Spring who was last year's captain of the college team, the followers of the James camp look for a brilliant future for their man.

Loose playing all around lost the game for the Beverlys, while the Peabody team played a fast all around game, a timely hit in the fourth inning, made by Reynolds with two men on bases, scoring the runs. The score:

EAST BOSTON COPS WIN.

The baseball team of Station 7, East Boston, went over to Soldiers' Field yesterday morning and beat the Cambridge police team 20 to 18. The game was made fairly close and mighty interesting by the fact that both teams were skillful with the stick, but couldn't catch anything, from a foul tip to a line drive, which, however, is no reflection on their efficiency as police officers.

SPRRELL PRINT WIN AGAIN.

The ball players of the Columbian National Life Insurance Company were defeated in a game of baseball to the tune of 14 to 1 by the Sparrell Print's champions of the trade teams. The interesting features were the pitching of Simmons and the heavy hitting of his team-mates.

PLAYFAIR GIRLS WON.

In a well played game on Sloane Field the Playfair girls team defeated the Verdi boys 10 to 9, it taking ten innings to decide. Score:

BIG TEAM RACE AT BEACH TRACK

There was plenty of racing at the Revere track last night, when four riders behind the motors appeared in a team contest.

MacLean and Mettling were paired against Caldwell and Stinson, and won handily.

Ten-mile heats were ridden, the winners of first and second heat meeting and the two losers deciding between them, making four heats.

MacLean defeated Stinson and then Mettling, who has previously beaten Stinson, getting first prize.

For the third money Caldwell met Stinson in the last heat of the forty miles of racing. Caldwell was shaken before going five miles and made a victory easy for Stinson.

In the first heat MacLean and Stinson met and they cut out the pace from the gun, starting from opposite sides of the track. Before half the distance was covered MacLean had closed up the gap and was trailing the big Cambridge rider, but tried a dozen times to pass him, but not till the last mile did the Revere rider do the trick, and he won by three quarters won by a quarter lap in 15.18 ⅕.

Caldwell, the giant, and Mettling, the pigmy, came out for the second heat.

Though just out of a sick bed, Caldwell went into the race to do the best he could, and made the little Jamaica Plain flyer go the limit before succumbing. Mettling won by a quarter lap in 15.1 3-5.

The team mates, Mettling and MacLean, clashed in the third heat to pick out a top winner. MacLean reserved his spurt till the last mile and went by Mettling after a hot tussle. The time was the fastest of the evening being 14.58 3-5.

One mile amateur handicap. Won by E. L. Collins scratch, second, J. N. Burrelto, 200 yards, third, F. Connolly, 90 yards. Time 2.02 1-5.

BEMIS'S BOAT WON.

Manchester-by-the-Sea, Aug. 5.—In a stiff southeasterly breeze the little tenders sailed over the four-mile course off West Manchester this afternoon, making good time. It was the fourth in a series of special races for sailing tenders, and A. F. Bemis's boat won, leading the Manchester Yacht Club tender by over two minutes.

SOMERVILLE, 3; READING, 2.

Reading, Aug. 5.—The Reading town team was defeated by the strong Somerville team this afternoon by a score of 3 to 2. Caswell and Nichols had a pitchers' battle and the former had a little the better of the argument.

HOT GAME AT WINTHROP.

The rivals of the Ocean View Hotel and Crest Hall played at Fort Bank yesterday. Ocean View was an easy winner by a score of 12 to 4.

Favorites Home First in Races at Nashua

Nashua, N. H., Aug. 5.—Like all previous Saturday races at the Nashua track, the attendance to-day was small, and little interest was taken outside of the inveterate followers of the turf. Three races were run off and three heats comprized each race. Most of the favorites came up into line and carried off the money. Summaries:

NEWICK'S CURVES TOO MUCH FOR PAWTUCKET.

Special to the Sunday American.

Lynn, Aug. 5.—Lynn Association shut out Pawtucket by a score of 4 to 0 this afternoon, due to great slab work on the part of Newick, who allowed the visitors but one hit and struck out ten men.

Only one man reached third for the visitors. O'Donnell pulled down a high line drive with one hand. Yerkes of the Buffalo Eastern League was found for eight hits. The score:

MAPLEWOOD, 10; MALDEN, 2.

Malden, Aug. 5.—Maplewood Council, K. of C., defeated the Malden Council at Maplewood this afternoon in an interesting game by a score of 10 to 2, in the K. of C. League. This was Malden's first game in the league and they made a very creditable showing, holding their opponents in fine style after the fourth inning.

UPPER FALLS BOYS BEAT TEAM OF WEST NEWTON.

Special to the Boston American.

Waltham, Aug. 5.—About five thousand people attended the annual field day of the St. Johns Industrial School which was held on the Newton Centre Athletic Grounds to-day. The affair was a distinct success surpassing anything of its kind ever given by the supporters of this worthy institution. There were attractions for young and old and every form of entertainment was liberally patronized. In the afternoon the baseball game between the teams representing West Newton and Newton Upper Falls took precedence over all the rest of the sports. Intense rivalry exists between the two teams and the result was a very exciting game. Upper Falls took the lead in the early innings to the great delight of their many friends. West Newton was unable to overcome this lead and finally succumbed to their rivals by a score of 11 to 6. The score:

Checkers Moved Fast on Franklin Park Speedway

Franklin Field held a good lot of horsemen yesterday afternoon. Eight races were on the card, and they afforded sport for three hours.

First came the pacing championship class. Ornament won it by default from Helgamite, and defended it for one race, but yesterday was obliged to surrender it to Checkers, who has had a regard for it for a long time. He won it yesterday in a good clean-cut race.

In the first class for trotters Rex won by the withdrawal of Lady Madison and La Gazelle, after Lady Madison had won two heats and La Gazelle had made good in one.

In Class A, pacing, Billy Nevins could not get Argunot to his clip for two heats, and when he did Fred kept him awful busy. Fred has to wear hobbles. He and his driver are not on speaking terms.

In Class B Muster Mac did not show up and Percy just jogged slowly over the course and nailed a blue ribbon.

The officials were: Starter, S. Walter Wales; judges, A. Marsh, W. M. Brumett and George A. French.

The summaries:

When "Cy" Young Hit the Ball.

By Jacques Futrelle

Of course you've heard of Casey, lads,
the youth of mighty swat
Who banged away at atmosphere
till it was sizzling hot.
He poked one hole in ambient air, then
poked two more—that's all—
But, Holy Jumping Caesar, lads,
when "Cy" Young hit the ball!

Say, I'll tell you all about it, kids,
The game was four and five,
'Twas up to Boston, good and hard,
To slam a husky drive.
So Uncle Cy, he drifted up—
He wasn't feeling good—
But grabbed a bat built like a log
To do the best he could.

The Redskins looked him over and
They wore a cheerful grin.
The "old man" was a wonder once,
But now—it was a sin!
"It's taking candy from a child,"
They murmured gently, low.
But Uncle Cy stood at the plate,
And said: "Bill let her go."

Two men were on the bases, kids,
Just aching for a chance
To run, when Uncle Cy massaged
The grand stand held it's breath-
ovitch,
The pitcher, in a knot,
Let drive the ball. It sizzled o'er

Well, Uncle Cy let out a kink,
And swung the bat way back,
Then, let it come meanderin' o'er,
And, gee! there was a crack!
Then somewhere in the evening air
The globe soared off in space,
Ten thousand tongues sung out a chant—
Cy hiked it for first base.

Now somewhere in the wilds of Maine,
And on Rhode Island's shore,
Ten thousand Redskins seek the ball
To find it never more.
"It's gone, it's gone, again it's gone,"
The Indians softly moan—
"It's gone so far it's sailing round
An orbit of its own."

You know what Dewey did to Spain,
what Togo gave to "Roe,"
You know how Schley passed in the dough.
You know how Paul Jones whipped a fleet and took a desperate chance—
Compared to what "Cy" did, my sons, they ain't a circumstance.

Of course you've heard of Casey, lads,
the youth of mighty swat
Who banged away at atmosphere
till it was sizzling hot.
He poked one hole in ambient air, then
poked two more—that's all—
But, Holy Jumping Caesar, lads,
when "Cy" Young hit the ball!

Fifteen thousand fans went wild with delight and hundreds threw their hats wildly into the air in the eighth inning of yesterday's game between Boston and Cleveland at the American League grounds, when Cy Young, the great, cracked out a rattling home run to the centre field fence, scoring two men ahead of him.

Never in the history of professional baseball in this city, and it's doubtful if in any other, did a crowd let loose such wild cheers as when the only Cy Young made his timely hit.

Over in the first base bleachers the thousands of fans who had been boiling for an hour and a half in a hot sun roared until they were hoarse and one fan got so enthusiastic that he fell forward, bringing down hundreds of spectators into a heap, and for a minute or two it was thought many were injured, yes, killed. When everybody had righted themselves it was found that the casualties were only a few bruises and scratches.

Didn't Mind Bruises.

And the man who started the trouble was never asked to explain his movement. All were too pleased with Cy's hit to bother about so trifling a matter as a few bruises and scratches.

If it hadn't been for the timely interference of the police the crowd would have swarmed onto the field and carried Young off on their shoulders.

A home run was never needed as much as when Cy got it. Nobody had the slightest idea of a four sacker from the veteran pitcher and the majority considered that if Cy got a single base hit he would be lucky and the fans would have been pleased. But a homer—it seems like one big dream, such as the welsh rabbit gives one who partakes of it before retiring.

Cy Young owns Boston. The very ground he walks on is sacred. For days to come, yes years, Cy's name will ring—everlastingly ring—in the ears of every boy in this vicinity.

Young Not Excited.

The person to least show excitement was Young himself. A smile which spread from ear to ear was the only thing that appeared on Cy's countenance to show how happy he was over the hit.

A copper who holds the gate closed for those who have no right to pass, between the grandstand and third base bleachers, forgot all about his duties when Cy crossed the plate, and rushed up to him with his hand far outstretched. Following him came a hundred or more urchins, and for a minute big Cy was lost to sight. His teammates came to his rescue, however, and the kids were soon rushed back to their places.

One year ago Young shut out Philadelphia without a man reaching first. But three weeks ago he lost a twenty-inning game to Waddell through errors. Great was the rejoicing then, but it compared nothing with that of yesterday. It is doubtful if ever again will a play be made on the diamond which will turn the fans from such gloom to such happiness.

"Cy" Kept Busy Shaking Hands.

It took an hour for those 15,000 fans to clear from the field. Everyone wanted to shake hands with the greatest of great pitchers—the king—and if it hadn't been for Carl Green, the genial treasurer of the club, who rushed a cab to Young's rescue, he would have lost his hand, and perhaps his arm.

Everybody made a clutch to shake that hand and arm which has many a time pulled the Champs from the defeat to victory and which has helped in a large measure to win three pennants for them.

When Boston went to bat in the eighth inning they needed two runs to put them on par with the Clevelands. Burkett started the fun by cracking out a single to left centre. Earl Moore, who was twirling for the visitors, passed Collins. Stahl sacrificed the runners each along a peg. Freeman managed to get a walking ticket after two strikes had been called upon him. Ferris gladdened the hearts of all by hitting safely to centre, sending Burkett and Collins across the pan. Criger followed him with another hit to centre, and by hard running Buck scored.

Then Up Came Young.

Then up came Young. He was given an ovation and responded by hitting the first ball Moore sent up for a high foul fly which soared over the grand stand. The next ball was waist high, swift as a bullet and directly over the heart of the plate. It never fully reached the plate, however, for Cyrus met it square on the nose and it never stopped until it hit the extreme East end of the left field bleachers.

Before Cy had got half way to second, Ferris and Criger had brought in tallies. At top speed Cy went past second and when he got to third he hesitated. Only for a fraction of a second did he hesitate, however, for Captain Jimmy Collins was on the line and motioned frantically with his arms for Cy to try for home.

Cy turned to look for the ball as he sped by the third corner and saw Vinson, the fleet-footed centre fielder of the Naps, preparing to throw to Bemis to cut him off at the plate.

Being a poor runner and knowing that he would have to exert every muscle to get home in time, Young gathered himself for the final sprint. His legs responded nobly to the call and he dashed over the pan fully two seconds before the ball bounded into Bemis's mitt.

Young almost dropped from exhaustion when he had stopped from his wonderful flight and when he went out to the box, first of the ninth, to serve up his assortment to the Nap's batters he could hardly move, he was so tired, and, for a minute or two it looked as though the visitors might do some damage, but Cy was there with the goods, although a man got to second and another to third before the inning was ended.

Young Didn't Issue a Pass.

Young pitched a wonderful game. He was touched up for eleven hits, a number of which were very timely. In fact all of the runs secured by the visitors were made by timely hitting. Eleven men, however, fell victims to his superb twirling, while not a single man did he pass to first.

Moore started off well, but in the sixth he passed Burkett and allowed Stahl a two-bagger, which brought in a run. In the seventh he walked two men and allowed Young to secure a pretty sacrifice and another run came in.

In the eighth Moore went all to pieces. Four singles and a home run and two walking tickets was his record.

Chick Stahl made a wonderful one-hand catch of Flick's drive to the flag pole in the third. It was one of the best catches ever made on the Huntington Avenue grounds and Chick was given a great ovation.

Grant, the new second baseman, secured from Lynn by the Naps, accepted three chances without an error, but with the willow proved woefully weak, striking out the four times he was at bat.

Cleveland First to Score.

Cleveland began the scoring act right at the start. Jackson opened with a single to right. Vinson hit to Young, who tossed to Ferris, forcing Jackson. Flick singled to right. Bradley fanned. Turner doubled to right, scoring Vinson and Flick. Carr ended the inning by fanning.

Both scored in the sixth inning, Cleveland twice and Boston once. Jackson hit a hot one to Parent who threw too late. Freeman thought Jackson was out and threw the ball on the ground to Cy, who fumbled it, and Jackson went to third. Vinson singled, scoring Jackson. Collins threw out Flick. Bradley fanned. Turner hit to left centre for three bases and Vinson crossed the pan with the second run. Carr flied to Stahl.

In the last of the sixth Turner threw out Parent. Burkett worked a pass and went to second when Grant threw out Collins. Stahl doubled to centre, scoring Burkett. Buck hit nothing but atmosphere in his attempt to make a home run.

Another tally was forthcoming for the Champs in the seventh. Ferris and Criger both walked. Young sacrificed to Carr. Turner threw out Selbach, but Ferris scored on the out. Parent hit to Bradley and was an easy out at the initial sack.

Then came the lucky eighth when Cy came to the rescue. The score:

If records go to prove anything, and they say they do, Cy Young of the Boston Champs has all the pitchers that ever threw a ball over the pan beaten to a pulp. You remember, of course, that last year, against the mighty Athletics, with Rube Waddell his rival, Young pitched his famous "no-man-to-first-game." This is the greatest feat on baseball record. 'Twas only 3 weeks ago, against the same Athletics, and with Waddell pitching, Cy went twenty innings, and was beaten out, 4 to 2, through errors on the part of his teammates. His team outbatted the Slowtown aggregation, and it was too bad that Cy couldn't have gotten the full credit for the performance. Then comes his great performance against the Clevelands yesterday, when he registered a fierce homer with two men on bases.

WASHINGTON, 9; CHICAGO, 1.

Special to the Sunday American.

Washington, Aug. 5.—The Senators enjoyed a batting feast to-day, driving Walsh to the bench and hitting Patterson almost as hard. Hughes pitched finely throughout, holding the White Sox down to four safeties. Sensational plays were pulled off by Hickman, who picked two apparent safe hits off the sun in right field, while Fielder Jones chased two long flies a mile and then hung on to the ball. Just how effective was Washington's hitting can be gleaned from the fact that but two runners were left on bases. The score:

ATHLETICS, 5; DETROIT, 3.

Philadelphia, Aug. 5.—The pennant aspirations of one Connie Mack must be considered, as was proven here to-day when his band of white elephants downed the Detroit Tigers in a game much on the jungle order by the score of 5 to 3. The Athletics played a fast game, and they rectified errors in field by swats when at the bat.

The Rube was in fine fettle, and he fanned nine of his opponents. Killian also pitched good ball, and, while his support was poor, it was not swift enough to be fatal at times when runners put out would have counted. Schaeffer pulled off one of the longest home runs seen here. He smashed a liner which sailed over left field fence and bounced on the roof tops. The score:

RUBE WINS CLOSE RACE OVER FIELD OF SEVEN YACHTS.

Closing Contests in the Midsummer Series of the Boston Y. C. Bring Out Big Crowd. 22-Footers Have Best Match

With the club verandas crowded with beautiful women and their escorts and the harbor filled with pleasure yachts and launches, the closing races of the midsummer series of the Boston Yacht Club were held off Marblehead yesterday.

The weather was all that could possibly be desired. The sky was clear, the sea [illegible] and the breeze a stiff one, blowing [illegible] west.

The 22-footers and catboats shared the [illegible]. It was the first appearance of the latter boats in this series. In the handicap classes the entries were large. An added attraction was the [illegible].

ONE RECORD GOES BY BOARD AT SCOTS' PICNIC.

Resplendent in tunic, kilt and sporran, the bonnie Scot entertained nearly 10,000 people at the fifty-second annual picnic of the Boston Caledonian Club in Caledonian Grove, West Roxbury, yesterday. As in former years the principal attraction was the athletic games in which the leading professionals of the country were entered, although the skill and grace of the sword dancers and the Highland Fling champions appealed especially to the large audience of sweet-hearts and daughters of the wearers of the Glengary and Balmora bonnets.

The short dashes in the afternoon games were characterized by keen competition and close finishes. In nearly every event the time was exceptionally fast, and in the field events one record for the games was broken. This was by D. Mahoney, who, in an exhibition throw, hurled the heavy weight a distance of 32 feet 2½ inches, which closely endangers the world's record by John Flanagan.

Professional Games.

100-yard dash—First heat, won by Guertin, time 10 1-5s.; second heat, won by Metz, time 10 2-5s.; third heat, won by Neary, time 10 1-5s.; fourth heat, won by Ed. Hines, time 10 1-5s.; final heat won by Hines, Neary second, Guertin third, time 10s.

DANVERS TOO FAST FOR NAVY TEAM

Special to the Boston American.

Danvers, Aug. 5.—Danvers was too much for the U. S. S. Wabash team, so that about the middle of the game Hayward was taken out of the box for Danvers and Henderson put in, to make the contest more interesting. Features were the batting of Danvers, catch by Cody and double play by Lanctot and Larich of Danvers and three-bagger by Kane of the visitors. The score:

ADAMS A PUZZLER.

Special to the Sunday American.

Natick, Aug. 5.—The Coolidge A. C. whitewashed the Allstons on the Chester street grounds this afternoon by a score of 12 to 0. The feature was the pitching of Adams, who struck out ten men and allowed the visitors only one hit. The score:

| | | | | | | | | | | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Coolidge A. C. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 3 | 8 | 0 | 1 | 2 | 0— | 12 | 13 | 3 |
| Allston | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0— | 0 | 1 | 3 |

FRANKLINS IN FRONT.

The Franklins of Charlestown defeated the Charlestowns at the Sullivan square playgrounds in a one-sided contest by the score of 10 to 9. The heavy hitting of the Franklins caused the retirement of Judge, the pitcher for Charlestown, in favor of Sullivan. Features of the game were the batting of Henderson and Curran for the Franklins and the fielding of Hines for Charlestown. The batteries were: For Charlestown, Sullivan and McDonald; for Franklin, Foley and Morton.

LYNN, 1; HAVERHILL, 0.

Lynn, Aug. 5.—Bushey for Lynn had a shade the better of a pitchers' battle this afternoon over McGinley for Haverhill, the club scoring a shutout, 1 to 0.

Bushey was in the points for his first game with the locals, having recently been purchased from the Lowell team. He allowed an equal number of hits with McGinley, but struck out six men to the latter's two, and had wonderful control at critical moments.

B[illegible] with two strikes on him in the first inning, sent the sphere over the left field fence for a complete circuit, the only tally of the game. In the last half of the sixth, with two out, Wallace scored his century hit of the season with a two-bagger. Murphy drew a pass and both were advanced a base on an error by Lovell on a throw by Bushey to catch Wallace on a steal for third. Browne, the next man up, flied out to Labelle and Haverhill lost the only chance to score. Both pitchers gave fine support. The game was one of the fastest ever seen here, Haverhill making an errorless game. The score:

NEW BEDFORD, 14; NASHUA, 1.

Special to the Sunday American.

New Bedford, Aug. 5.—The Nashua club was no match for New Bedford this afternoon with Mack pitching, and the home team won by a score of 14 to 1. The local players made safe hits almost at will during the four innings that Cox pitched, and Phelan, who succeeded him, stopped the slaughter. Dwyer made two three-baggers and a single, Kehoe two doubles, and Mulvaney took four singles for his share of the picnic. Three fast double plays by the New Bedford infielders were features. The score:

FITZ WILLING TO MEET HART FOR A BIG SIDE BET.

BY TAD.

New York, Aug. 5.—"I'd be only too glad to fight Marvin Hart or any of the other fellows if the purse offered was big enough," said Bob Fitzsimmons last night as he strutted along the Bright Line.

"It's this way with me," said Bob, as he rubbed his freckled mitt on the chest of the writer. "I have a show that is about to start on a tour. A good season stares me in the face, there's plenty of money in it, and I'm as sure of that as Jeff is of his old title. Now, why should I give up a good season on the road just for a few measley bones in fighting? Why should I take a chance on a bum house in a fight when I'm sure of a good one in the show business?

"Compredes vous?" said the freckled one as he bunched his shoulders, smiled and took another pull at his Cremo. "I'm only too glad to fight, but there's no money in it. No, I'm not too old. Those fellows are baming themselves that think I am. Why, right now you couldn't hand me a ripe peach. I'm right on edge and feel like a colt. There's none of these fellows that have anything on me when it comes to swapping the dream tablets. Did you get that?

"I hope Hart sees it in print. If he will make me a suitable side bet and can get a good guaranteed purse I'll fight him six rounds, ten rounds or to a finish. It's a matter of supreme indifference to me what length the fight is signed up for. I think I could stick one on his jaw that wouldn't come off for a week, and that's no Buffalo Bill, either, as Chuck Connors says.

"What d'ye think of my new wig?" said Fitz, as he doffed the roof and exposed a bunch of new mown hay on top of his conk. "I got that over in Paris. It's a new one, and the candy, too. I need it in the show next year. You know, the girl makes love to me in the third act, and lawst year she had to pipe me bald dome. This year she will look at a beautiful tuft of auburn hair.

"Why, I look about thirty with this new thing decorating me top, don't I?" And he gently walloped the writer where the floating rib meanders about.

"Say," continued Bob, just getting Jerry to a new thought, "this Charley Mitchell and John L. Sullivan fight ought to be the jammy article, eh? The idea of those two old men awsking me for a fight. Haw! Haw. Why, a young follow like me caught in the ring with either of those mummies would be arrested. Well if they show the frog skins tell them I'm there like old Trinity. S'long."

UNIONS DID A GOOD DAY'S WORK

The Union A. C. of Cambridge distinguished themselves by winning two hard-fought games yesterday afternoon. The first game, in which the Bristols of South Boston were their opponents, was a ten-inning contest, with the final score of 2 to 1 in favor of the Union A. C. Having finished with the South Boston boys, the Unions turned their attention to the Lincolns of Cambridge and beat them, 9 to 0.

ROXBURY, 10; MALDEN, 1.

Malden, Aug. 5.—The crack West Roxbury team defeated the Malden Independents this afternoon 10 to 1 and still remain undefeated. Malden was weakened by the absence of four of her best players, and therefore did not put up her usual brilliant game. The game was a pitcher's battle up to the sixth inning when the Roxbury boys landed on White for two home runs and a couple of singles, which was too much of a lead to overcome.

MIDDLESEX, 16; MYSTIC, 5.

Malden, Aug. 5.—Middlesex Lodge of Odd Fellows of this city added another victory to their long list in the Odd Fellows League, when they defeated the Mystic Lodge this afternoon 16 to 5. Priest who pitched for the home team had the visiting players at his mercy throughout the game. Middlesex Lodge has won the last seven games played.

CHOCOLATE MAKERS WON.

Russell's chocolate makers defeated the Father Mathew baseball team on Cambridge Common yesterday afternoon, 10 to 1. Moran and Lyons were the battery for the chocolate makers and Burke and Campbell for the Father Mathews.

CLAY PITCHES FINE FOR DORCHESTER LOCALS.

The Locals of Dorchester easily outclassed the Boston Unions in a game full of excitement from start to finish on Dunbar Avenue Grounds, and, to the delight of a thousand loyal rooters, won the game by a score of 4 to 0.

Clay, the new pitcher for the Dorchester boys, played his first game, and proved himself a wonder. He struck out eleven men, made five hair-raising assists and was on hand with a timely single. His performance of yesterday made him a permanent fixture with the Locals.

Joe Fish, who wears the mask for the Locals, was on his toes all of the time, and his fine work behind the bat did much to encourage his team mates. His throwing to second was perfection, and he easily nailed every man who made a try for a steal from first.

For the Unions, Jones, Ring and McIntire played the best game, the first two getting the only hits made by their nine. The score:

ST. MARYS WON.

Malden, Aug. 5.—The St. Mary's C. T. A. defeated the Medford Foresters on Craddock Park this afternoon, 17 to 9. Steve Cram, the crack ex-Medford High School twirler, was in the points for the Forest ers, and was wild throughout the game. He struck out seven men. The home team smashed his curves all over the lot, and won out easily.

BEHR WON SINGLES IN NAHANT TENNIS

Special to the Sunday American.

Nahant, Mass., Aug. 5.—All North Shore society in gala attire filled the grounds of the fashionable Nahant Club for the close of the first week of the tennis tournament this afternoon, and witnessed Behr of Yale and Sulloway of Harvard take three straight sets from Hallowell and Ware, 10—8, 6—2 and 10—4, winning the double finals.

Behr was the strong card. After defeating E. B. Dewhurst in the singles this morning he went into the doubles and played championship tennis, doing the major portion of the work and showing up in remarkable form. His smashes were terrific and he played into Hallowell as the weak spot on the opposing side. His strokes were made with great precision and his covering ground won continued applause on saving almost sure plays.

TENNEY'S MEN DROP A DOUBLE-HEADER TO THE COLTS AT CHICAGO

By Boston American Leased Wire.

Chicago, Aug. 5.—Chicago took two games from Boston this afternoon.

The first was six to nothing and the second five to one.

Twelve thousand fans turned out and sweltered. Perhaps they didn't swelter as much as though the scores had not been so one sided, but they sweltered enough. It was one of the hottest days this summer has turned out. The first game was long, tiresome and almost featureless. The two most prominent features were a home run by Chance and the bombardment of Fraser.

It required two hours and ten minutes to play the game. Both Wicker and Fraser are slow pitchers, and they took more than the ordinary amount of time in their deliveries.

Fraser was almost driven out of the box. The Cubs began by scoring in the first inning.

Boston was near a run only once. This was when Fraser reached third, and allowed himself to be put out by not keeping careful tab on where the ball was.

The second game was clinched in the first by Chicago making three runs off an error by Needham, a fumble by Abbaticchio and two hits off Wilhelm. With Weimer pitching at his best, it was impossible for Boston to overcome this lead.

Chicago made its fourth run in the fifth when Kling opened up with a three-bagger and was sent home by Chance's single. Boston made a single run in the seventh when Needham doubled and came all the way home on two passed balls by O'Neil. Chicago scored again in the seventh, Kling drawing a base on balls, stealing second and scoring on Chance's single.

Umpire Johnstone was struck by a foul tip in the eighth inning of the first game, and was unable to continue in the second. The ball hit him in the neck and the pain, combined with the intense heat, made it necessary for him to seek the services of a physician. After a long delay between games Pitchers Lundgren for Chicago and Young for Boston were appointed as umpires. Lundgren took care of the balls and strikes and Young umpired on the bases. The scores:

PHILLIES LAND TWO.

St. Louis, Aug. 5.—Philadelphia Nationals took two games from St. Louis to-day, winning both contests easily. Arndt's home run was the feature of the second game. Manager Burke was injured in a collision with Titus in the first game and had to retire in Taylor's favor. Arndt became ill in the second game and was succeeded by another pitcher, Thielman. Attendance, 9,500. Scores:

CINCINNATI, 19; BROOKLYN, 6.

Cincinnati, Aug. 5.—The Reds piled up a mountain of runs this afternoon by hard hitting at the expense of Pitchers Strickett and Mitchell. Huggins made a season's record of five runs scored. Strickett was taken out before the first inning was over, but during his time the Reds piled up eight runs. A base on balls, seven singles and a double was the record of the "father of the spit ball." Barry and Kelly each made two hits in this inning. Mitchell gave three passes, forcing in two runs in the third and an error, two singles and triples by Odwell and Steinfeldt rolled this inning's total up to seven. The score:

ENTHUSIASM IS AROUSED BY JEROME.

Remarkable Response to His Declaration That He Wants to Run Independently for District-Attorney's Office

SEEKS NOMINATION AT HANDS OF THE PEOPLE

Is a Democrat, but Wishes Nomination to Be Without Incumbrance of Claims by Machine of Either Party

New York, Aug. 5.—One of the remarkable phases of the feeling of the people at large in connection with public offices has been manifested in this city by the demand that has been made for the reelection of William Travers Jerome as District Attorney of this county.

The plea for Jerome is that he is honest. Since he has been in [illegible] of the important office of District Attorney there have been many things said against him, but nobody has ever questioned his honesty and his intention to do what is best.

So the question has arisen as to whether he will be the candidate again of any party. Jerome is a Democrat, but that does not bother him much. If he wants to be District Attorney, and he says he does—he will not question party lines in his nomination.

Non-partisans Support Him.

Some very prominent men who are not bound by party lines have come out boldly in favor of the reelection of Jerome. Tammany has said nothing. Murphy, ordinarily Tammany's chief, is about as communicative as the Sphinx, but he is pretty strong in seeing the handwriting on the wall.

The Republicans when they put up a ticket [illegible] so that [illegible] fate, with [illegible] sens [illegible] of the metropolis [illegible] the last [illegible] candidate.

The fact of the matter is that Jerome himself does not care whether any [illegible] body nominates him or not. He will be a candidate just the same and appeal to the whole people regardless of party. The feeling for honesty in the carrying on of public affairs that is beginning to permeate the public in general [illegible] this city, it would appear.

Jerome went [illegible] regardless of position [illegible] landed and many of them he didn't [illegible] sending of A. Adams [illegible] Sing Sing was a wonderful [illegible] his power and the political [illegible] consideration. [illegible] campaign against Canfield [illegible] not result in anything more than an easy fine is regretted. Jerome's [illegible] he got the best he could [illegible].

New Situation in Politics.

But it is an unusual political situation that the people should come out and insist that a public man be renominated so far before the inauguration of a campaign. An idea of the situation may be obtained by the statements that have been made by prominent men.

Edward M. Shepard, one of the most prominent Independent Democrats of the Greater City, is out for Jerome. He says:

"We all know [illegible] the crying need of our time is simple, plain, downright honesty, and a hatred of bribery in its [illegible] varieties of form, some more and some less responsible. [illegible] Mr. Jerome is sound to the core. We know [illegible] first term [illegible] of them [illegible] picturesque [illegible] honest, zealous [illegible] public interest [illegible] the benefit of his [illegible] useful service for another [illegible]."

S. S. McClure, the magazine man, has this straight out [illegible]:

"William Travers Jerome [illegible] the thing is the real stuff. [illegible] the best public [illegible] seen in twenty [illegible] have any [illegible] to offer. [illegible] majority that [illegible] gave a candidate [illegible] New York [illegible]."

In the [illegible] much except that [illegible] the gift of the [illegible] that of District Attorney [illegible] ask any party [illegible] him. If any [illegible] him he will [illegible].

"I am in the hands of the people [illegible]. I should like to be District Attorney for another term."

Gamblers to Fight Him.

That is Jerome's attitude. So far as political organizations are concerned, none of them have indicated their attention regarding this office. There [illegible] declare that the gambling element will make a mighty fight [illegible] of Jerome, but [illegible] what extent that [illegible] the city at large.

The one thing that stands out assured to-day is that Jerome will be a candidate for re-election and the [illegible] that the tide of public feeling [illegible] ried Folk and [illegible] West will be triumphant [illegible] tion time in connection with this office.

HERRESHOFF RACER COVERS 38 MILES ON FIRST TRIAL.

Makes the Test With Broken Cylinder In Long Island Sound, Going at Express Train Speed—40 Miles Possible

New York, Aug. 5.—The Herreshoff racing motor boat, the Den, built at the works of the American and British Manufacturing Company of Bridgeport by the designer Charles Herreshoff, Jr., for the president of the company, John H. Hanan [illegible], attained the astonishing speed of thirty-eight miles an hour in her first trial trip in Long Island Sound. Mr. Herreshoff, who was accompanied by his wife in the test, believes the boat is the speediest thing of her kind in the world.

Because one of her batteries became dead, Mr. Herreshoff was [illegible] make the trip today with three cylinders [illegible] instead of four which is the complete equipment. Had the accident not occurred the designer [illegible] would have gone [illegible] forty miles [illegible] hour. That he expects to far surpass the showing made to-day may be expected from what Mrs. Herreshoff said after the return.

The Den is shaped like a long [illegible] perfectly [illegible] pointed at bow and stern and carrying a [illegible] gasoline motor [illegible] three [illegible] of [illegible] the hull being of steel pin [illegible] [illegible] has a motor which weighs [illegible] can be ascertained [illegible] and motor [illegible] two points [illegible] the boat [illegible] [illegible] the yacht sets high in the water and actually skims along the surface with the speed of an express train.

AUGUST COSMOPOLITAN

A gifted writer is at his best in the brilliant biography. It's a REAL STORY, though founded on facts—a story full of heart-throbs and back-thrills.

EVERYONE SHOULD READ IT!

The August Cosmopolitan

Also contains contributions from eminent scholars, and various articles in lighter vein and much fiction from the pens of best-known and best-loved writers.

The August Cosmopolitan

Is an ideal number of the Ideal American Magazine. If you fail to get it from the first newsdealer of whom you ask, try the next, and a third, if necessary. It's worth a little trouble. Many dealers have sold out, and are not able at once to get more.

FOXY GRANDPA

THE BOYS CHASE THE CHICKENS, BUT A TREMENDOUS ROOSTER NEARLY FRIGHTENS THEM OUT OF THEIR WITS

1. BOYS: "While Gran'pa's busy reading let's go out and have some fun chasing the chickens."

2. GRANDPA: "So those young mischiefs are going to chase my chickens. I'll soon put a stop to their little game."

3. GRANDPA: "How lucky I saved this old costume."

4. BOYS: "Hoop la! Just see them run! Oh, but this is great sport."

5. BOYS: "Goodness! Look! What is this coming?"

6. GRANDPA: "Cock-a-doodle-doo! Well, I guess those youngsters won't bother my chickens soon again."

THE LOVE OF LULU AND LEANDER

Copyrighted, 1905, by the American-Journal Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

1. LEANDER: "For heavens' sake! Here comes Lulu and that butter-in Onthespot. Ye gods! What shall I do? Ah, I see. My only hope is under this barrel until they pass."

2. CHARLEY ONTHESPOT: "Yes, this is a delightful spot. Suppose we stay here a little while and discuss this sentence in Browning. Let me lift you up on this barrel; it is nice and clean."
LULU: "Oh, Charley, you are such a cut-up."
LEANDER (under the barrel): "Ye gods! He has her in his arms! And me under here and can't say a word."

3. LULU: "Come, Charley, you sit up here, too. There is plenty of room."
CHARLEY: "I don't need a second invitation, Lulu."
LEANDER (under the barrel): "Great Scott! He may have his arm around her waist for all I know, and I dare not move. Talk about being under a cloud!"

4. THE BARREL: "K-r-r-a-c-k! B-A-N-G!
LULU: "O-o-o-o-o-o-o-h! OH!"
CHARLEY: "W-E-O-O-O-W!"
LEANDER: "Help! MURDER! I'm crushed to death!"

5. LULU: "Charley Onthespot! This is a downright outrage! Don't speak to me, Leander. Why didn't you call out you were under that barrel!"
CHARLEY: "But, Lulu, how could I tell!"
LEANDER: "Oh, Lulu, please don't be angry at ME!"

6. CHARLEY: "PLEASE listen to me, Lulu. I will explain"—
LULU: "I will listen to nothing. It was a mean practical joke you two tried to play on me. I want nothing to do with either of you again."
LEANDER (aside): "Ye gods! That lobster has got to fight me a duel for this."
